SELF-HELP FOR INCONTINENCE

I used to lose small amounts of urine during my daily activities, especially if I coughed or sneezed—a real nuisance. Then I read somewhere that coffee can cause bladder irritation. I decided to break my coffee habit once and for all. When I stopped the coffee, the leakage stopped too. Now I almost never have incontinence.

2. Hindering Apprehension - Success Not Necessary for Conviction

Logan v. State, 690 S.W.2d 311 (1985)

Logan was arrested on charges of hindering apprehension of a suspect sought by police after she told police that the suspect had fled down an alley in back of her home. In fact, the suspect was being hidden by her in the bedroom, and was discovered there after a search. The court stated that Logan's arrest was proper, since the offense of hindering apprehension is committed by one who intends to hinder arrest and provides another with the means of doing so. It does not depend upon whether one succeeds in one's intentions.

You can't imagine how awful I felt! Here I was—giving a dinner party for my husband's boss—when roaches showed up. If only I had known then about the COMBAT® Roach Control System.

You see, everybody had congregated in the kitchen as I was about to serve dinner. Suddenly, roaches walked right across my food counter. I tried to pretend they weren't there, but my husband got so upset, by the time we got to the table, nobody wanted to eat. But very politely they picked at the meal and left early.

a demented man arranges to kill off some people he does not care for. What is remarkable about the film is how the people are killed. The protagonist smears a cat's paw with poison and quickly drags the animal across the naked stomach of the woman with whom he has just had intercourse. The cat scratches the woman and she dies. Two women make love, and one is killed by a spring knife in the dildo her partner has inserted in her vagina. The protagonist marries a girl, and the morning after the wedding, kills his wife with the harpoon gun after watching a porno movie in which she masturbates a squash. The film ends with the castration of the hero by a machete-wielding fellow bent on revenge."

■ Thirty-seven-year-old Lester James Eierdam decided to do his community a service. After all, he had spent most of his life making people miserable, racking up more than 50 arrests in eight years, including the attempted murder of a Las Vegas police officer. Now he was going to kill himself, but inhaling hot magnum or jumping in front of a truck on the nearby interstate just wasn't his style. He was going to take somebody with him. Preferably a cop.

Eierdam's lethal odyssey began on October 11, 1988, well before the morning sun had a chance to heat the Las Vegas streets. He set his day in motion by drinking vodka straight from the bottle, popping some pills and shooting his five-shot .38 caliber handgun indiscriminately in and around his mobile home. He found a local friend named Keith Long, and together they prowled the streets.

Long was unsure what his buddy was up to. At the intersection of Nellis and Charleston, Eierdam slowly warmed up by pointing his gun at a female motorist. A little further north on Nellis, they passed a truck and Eierdam took a shot at the tires. After that, random street signs became targets.

A little after 1100 hours, Eierdam directed Long to the home of an ex-girlfriend, where he shot five rounds through the door.

Back-to-back calls came into the police department. One came from the female victim at Nellis and Charleston, and another from the ex-girlfriend, who mentioned that Eierdam had said something about not being taken alive by the police.

The incident was beginning to snowball for Eierdam and the Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Department.

Eierdam and Long hit the streets again. At Pecos and Bonanza, Eierdam terrorized another unsuspecting motorist by shooting out his tires. They stopped briefly to visit Eierdam's friends, where he acted even more strangely. Like a politician tossing campaign buttons to the loyal masses, Eierdam handed out his extra bullets as souvenirs. He talked of suicide and bequeathed two hundred dollars for his burial. When he had nothing more to do, Eierdam told Long that they were switching places in the car.

Once again they were back on the road, and before Eierdam could do any more damage, LVMPD Officer Jim Hulsey passed him coming from the opposite direction. Eierdam accelerated and swung the tan 1980 Dodge Diplomat into a residential area, racing several blocks before stopping in a cul-de-sac. By now, Long had guessed Eierdam's game plan. While Eierdam was busy pointing his gun at an irate neighborhood resident who had commented on his reckless driving, Long got out and walked away.

Eierdam continued his rampage alone. When he hit eastbound Chantilly a few minutes later, Officer Marc Kahre, a 13-year veteran assigned to the traffic division, fell in behind him. Hulsey, still in the immediate area, again found himself approaching from the opposite direction and quickly made a U-turn after Eierdam and Kahre had passed. Eierdam's first impulse was to rabbit. He slammed his foot down on the accelerator, but only managed to run up over the curb and veer sharply back into the street. Then he stood on the brakes, forcing Kahre to skid to a stop behind Eierdam's vehicle.

In a split second, Eierdam was out of his car. He balanced his left arm on the roof, extended his right arm and drew down on Kahre, who was still on his bike. In one practiced, fluid motion, Kahre shook his right glove loose, drew his weapon and fired. At the same time, from less than 15 feet away, Eierdam jerked his trigger.

The bullet hit Kahre in the forehead, dropping him against the side of Hulsey's vehicle, which had just pulled to the immediate left of Kahre's position. As Kahre slid to the pavement, his bike fell on top of him. Eierdam moved from his position, engulfed by the sight of the mortally wounded officer, and prepared for the kill.

Believing that Kahre had dumped his bike to take cover, Hulsey realized that he had no time to get out of his vehicle. Instinctively, he drew his 9mm semi-automatic handgun and fired through his windshield at Eierdam. Three of the bullets punched into Eierdam's midsection, and another found the spot where his shoulder curved up into his neck. Eierdam returned fire without effect as Hulsey ducked low into the car seat.

Eierdam didn't go down. In fact, he seemed unaffected by the fusillade that Hulsey had unleashed from less than 10 feet away. For the few seconds that he lay prone on the car seat, Hulsey expected Eierdam to appear at the window and continue the firefight. But when he glanced up, Eierdam was back at his vehicle and just about to enter the driver's side. Hulsey resumed firing and struck Eierdam once in the right, rear hip. Despite having been shot five times, Eierdam drove away from Officer Hulsey, who had in all, fired 21 rounds, reloading once.

Eierdam did not get far. In his haste to escape, he climbed the back of another vehicle that was stopped for a red light at the intersection of Lamb and Charleston. His psychotic wish fulfilled with the death of Kahre, he placed his weapon to his own head and pulled the trigger.

LOCK UP YOUR DAUGHTERS

During his trial, Robert Chambers, confessed murderer of Jennifer Levin, was videotaped at a New York party where he smoked marijuana and made jokes about the death. "He twisted the head of a doll, saying, 'My name is — oops! I think I killed it.'" Later, during a game of charades, Chambers pretended to choke himself and fell down. One of his female friends guessed the correct answer: "Death of a Salesman."

TWO COMPONENT HIGH-EXPLOSIVE MIXTURES

Yet another result of research at Frankford Arsenal, the material contained in this volume never reached our overt and covert operatives before the program was phased out. The emphasis in these tests was to produce extremely powerful, yet easily made explosives by combining two compounds which separately were very safe to handle. One of the resulting explosives covered, Astrolite A-1-5, is the world's most powerful non-nuclear explosive. 5 1/2" x 8", softcover, 28 pages illustrated.

Those walking wounded who tripped or fell from exhaustion were hacked to pieces by Ghilzee children or their elders.

The January attack on school children in Stockton, Calif., has given the issue a new salience. Patrick Purdy, described by Stockton police as a troubled drifter, fired some 110 rounds from an AK-47 assault rifle, killing five children and wounding 29 others as they played on the grounds of an elementary school.

In the wake of that attack, a number of communities around the country stepped up efforts that would sharply curtail ownership of the AK-47 and similar weapons. Those actions, however, have not been universally applauded. Some gun manufacturers have contested them, as has the National Rifle Association. President George Bush, a lifetime NRA member, has gone on record opposing federal regulatory action, and in so doing appears to be resisting pressure from law enforcement organizations that backed his campaign.

Predictably, the position of those opposing imposition of controls is that the criminal activity of some groups should not be used as the rationale for depriving law-abiding citizens of their rights and privileges. Improved law enforcement, it is argued, is the answer, not more laws.

Kansas City, Mo Police Chief Larry Joiner, takes a different view of the issue, however. "I would support a ban on the sale of assault weapons to private citizens," Joiner says. "They are only designed for one purpose—to kill people. No one I know hunts with an assault rifle."

That view is echoed by Redmond, Wash. Chief, Steven Harris. "I'm a sportsman and hunter myself," Harris says, "but I don't see the need for assault weapons to be sold to the general public."

Dear Box Holder,

We understand that much of our business comes about through word of mouth. We thank you and appreciate this very much.

From this point on, if someone were to come in and open a box as a result of a referral from you, we would give you one free month of box rental (we would extend your next renewal date one month). In order to receive your free month, the referred person would have to bring in this letter with your name and suite number filled in at the bottom.

Once again, thank you for your patronage.

"The papers described this as a 'sting' operation," Stutman explained. "It was much more than that. Thanks to some incredible police work, we managed to penetrate the Medellin cocaine cartel, and several key traffickers were arrested."

In retaliation, the Medellin group has openly declared that it intends to assassinate Stutman and Sterling Johnson, New York City's special narcotics prosecutor.

"We get very angry at this type of thing," Stutman said. Nonetheless, Stutman is concerned that the Medellin group, which has traditionally controlled the cocaine trade in the Southeastern United States, is trying to take over New York City distribution from the Cali group.

What a day! It started out in an ordinary way. I performed my morning ablutions—shaved, showered and shat—then I put all the fecal matter into the blender and pressed the Liquefy button. I wrapped a red necktie tightly around my arm, poured the brown juice into a disposable hypodermic and injected it slowly into my bulging vein. Ahhhh! Someday I hope to be a good enough writer to be able to articulate that incredible rush. But this time, just as I was peaking, the phone rang, like some kind of audio omen.

they had all agreed to do so beforehand, each cow shitted, pissed and trembled like crazy the whole way across.

One morning, furious over a paddling he'd just received, Brian climbed to the top of a ten-foot-high circular slide, tied one end of a jump rope around his neck, and secured the other to the steel handholds. He remembers feeling "nothing inside" as he pushed off. The rope jerked him backward off the slide and left him swinging three feet above the ground.

Why no locks?

Traditionally, Filipinos never used locks. This was because balis were usually the only means of self-defense. During an attack there's no time to "lock." Also, locks are useless, extraneous and dangerous. If you've ever had the misfortune of getting the lock caught between handles upon opening, you know how easy it is to sever some fingers when the handle unexpectedly springs back. When our only choice was a factory made bali, the first thing we did was cut off the lock. Then, we glued a thick piece of rubber to one handle near the tang. This prevented the handles from closing completely. This gives the bali a variable grip (live feeling), and enables the thumb to easily facilitate quick opening and closing.

PUNISHMENT AND REVENGE

With my exclusive design, a steel pin allows the hand to adjust the tension. This gives the knife an alive, adjustable feeling, which cannot be had with a dead feeling lock bali. Dear Shooter, THIS IS AS GOOD AS IT GETS!

DEAD MAN OUT

In 1986, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that executing the legally insane is unconstitutional. That ruling underpins the disturbing drama about a death-row inmate and the doctor who holds the man's fate in his hands.

Ben (Ruben Blades) is the condemned murderer (a "dead man" to the guards), whose eight years in the shadow of the gas chamber have reduced him to a near-catatonic state punctuated only by intermittent fits of violence. Ben has, accordingly, been judged "incompetent" to face execution. Alex (Danny Glover) is the psychiatrist the state has assigned to "cure" Ben—in other words, make him well enough to be executed. At first, Ben is completely unresponsive. But in time a strange symbiosis develops between the two men, and as they open up to each other they each give insights into the other's life.

A lot of handgun hunters are now trying their skill at wild turkey hunting and are striving to make the difficult head or neck shot on a gobbler. One of the best actual-size targets I've found to practice for this difficult shot is the turkey head and neck target from Primos Wild Game Calls. This target, which shows the vitals, was rendered from an actual X-ray of a gobbler. It measures 14x20 inches and has a bright orange bulls-eye. A pad of 50 retails for $12.99.

"It's difficult to understand why, with so many excellent cleaning products on the market, so many handgunners let their favorite firearms become so gummed up they cease to function properly or shoot accurately."

Exotic Openers

Exotic Openers is a small company founded by a master bladesmith and an expert martial artist who are tired of all the B.S. and misinformation in the custom knife world. Each blade is designed to protect the soul of its owner and is guaranteed for a lifetime of service. If you use the knife as it was intended, an Exotic Opener will never let you down. There are none finer. We will gladly advise you on what are the best materials to use. Of course there are disparate opinions and talk is cheap, but we'll match our balis against anyone's.

If you have your own preferences, just let us know, and we'll make them for you. Our only regret is that production is extremely limited, so if you can't wait for the best we're really sorry. We're working 18 hours a day as it is. It takes 3 weeks just to make a small (12 inch) billet of our Damascus, then we have to make the knife.

He advises handgun hunters to pick a particular vital spot and offers a guide for determining where to shoot:

"An easy rule of thumb to follow on any shot presented for a vital area hit is to intend the bullet to enter the animal one-third of the way up from the bottom of the animal's body. Any angle shot should be adjusted so the bullet will penetrate through a point between the center of the front legs to the offside leg. I believe this shot placement to be generally the most effective for any big-game animal. It allows greatest margin of error for a quickly fatal shot.

"Obviously, this does not work with going-away shots, where a spine shot into the pelvis is very effective. In fact, in my experience, any shot (assuming adequate caliber) striking the pelvis immobilizes an animal instantly."

Many officers simply removed the restraining strap from over the hammer and snapped it in place around the front edge of the holster. This poor practice negated much of the safety aspect, and almost overnight, a marked increase in the mortality rate of adjustable rear sights began. Stories began circulating regarding guns inadvertently left in toilet stalls, on patrol car seats/floors, lost in foot chases, and in other similar circumstances. These stories lost their humor when a successful gun grab on an unstrapped holster resulted in the tragic death of an officer.

Blocking service news

Blocking Service is now free for residence customers, no matter when you order it.

Blocking, which is not yet available in all areas, will enable you to restrict calls from your home phones to certain recorded messages and group conversation services.

Since its introduction last year, a one-time order charge of $5 has applied to residence customers who didn't order blocking within 90 days of it being offered. That time-limit has been eliminated for residence customers.

Recorded messages and group conversation services are available through the 976, 540, 970 and 550 telephone exchanges and the 900 and 700 numbers. These services are provided by independent companies who have full control over the content, promotion, and in most cases, pricing of their services. However, New York Telephone will bill for most of these services.

Poison would have been nice. Something that would rearrange Craig's insides before he succumbed; something that would remix the old Craig into a new one so that through new eyes he could see, right at the end, what he'd been like during all those deliberate, disciplined years of correctness. But I might give him too little. He might leave the house and die on the way to work or at work or, even worse, in his sleep. I would be there at the end. I wanted the fullness of my anger to rush out of me and into him so that I could once and for all be free. Yes, he would have to die knowing that I, his perfect mate, his Total Woman, had killed him. And I, for that moment, would see my 20 years of anger in his eyes.

Also I had to plan the best time. I enjoyed making these plans; they gave my days and my mind substance. In some ways just the making of the plans was enough. I knew when the best time would be, and I knew that I could wait for it to arrive. Craig was soon to be made a bird colonel, which, I assumed, must rank higher than just a regular colonel. More brass was to be placed upon his chest. More brass to define who he was and who he had become. More brass to cut through as he stood there at the front door, after having knocked with the news of his latest promotion. More brass to cut through as he stood there silent and smiling and pointing to his chest, pointing out my target. He would be standing there—so sure of who he was, of who I was. And as he stood, I, the murderer, would kill Craig, the Army's newest bird colonel.

While jackrabbits are tough-skinned, they aren't as tough as an old woodchuck or prairie dog. What's more, jackrabbits don't usually drop down into a den. For Ruger's single-action Blackhawk in .357 Magnum made an excellent varmint gun.

A small bit of fur soon eased upward, followed by an eye. In a few minutes, the woodchuck had his whole head exposed. I waited, motionless, for the sure shot. I wanted the whole top half of his body exposed.

With the front sight blade on the chuck's chest, the .357 roared. I had just sixgunned my first woodchuck!

Not only did I have the satisfaction of taking a chuck with a sixgun, I had the thrill of watching one up close.

I've since taken several woodchucks and other varmints with revolvers and semiautos. It takes a little more hunting, planning, and stalking to get close enough, but that adds to the excitement.

WHEN A SHOOTER thinks about hunting varmints with a handgun, he usually envisions 200-yard shots with a scoped XP-100 or T/C Contender chambered for something like a flat-shooting .223 Remington. Shooting prairie dogs or woodchucks with one of these aided by a good rest is a lot of fun, but even if you don't own one of these long-range specialty rigs you can go after varmints with a handgun.

I got into serious woodchuck hunting when I was in the service and stationed at Aberdeen Proving Ground in Maryland. While I was prowling around the local countryside looking for woodchuck sign, I learned that many chucks never ventured into the open—at least not long enough to get shot during daylight. Too many riflemen with .222s were waiting to take advantage of any carelessness.

Dial A Survivalist: (312) 821-LIVE

OUTWITTING SQUIRRELS
by Bill Adler, Jr.

Dial A Survivalist was inspired by the success of Dial A Prayer, Dial A Joke, (even the notorious Dial A Atheist) and other such telephone services. Most American cities have them. We felt that in a city of over a million telephones, Dial A Survivalist White and Yellow Page listings were the best mass advertising that we could afford. In fact, this is the first really mass public advertising Live Free has EVER had.

For many of us the little child (the root of what we really are) got lost when we couldn't be spontaneous anymore, but instead had to adapt to a dysfunctional family system. In children the private self is very large and the public self very small. Tiny children don't really care much about what others think of them, because they cannot assimilate the concept of public shame. As the child gets older the private self shrinks and the public self gets much wider, until in adulthood the public self has pretty much taken over, leaving only a small area that is completely private.

This last point deserves a bit of discussion. Separate studies of actual gunfights by myself and Detroit homicide investigator Evan Marshall independently reached the same conclusion: the .125 grain .357 hollowpoint was more likely to stop a gunfight with one shot than any other round in use.

I find the best .45 auto load, CCI's Speer Lawman 200 grain JHP, comes close—but I've only got 20 cases on file with it, and Evan has about 26.

The +P + 9mm comes close, but fewer than 20 people have ever been shot with it.

That "magic" .357 load has logged over 220 shootings in one department alone, and no suspect solidly hit with it has ever returned effective fire against an officer of that department. The Desert Eagle sportsman's pistol notwithstanding, the .357 Magnum is a revolver-only proposition for practical daily carry.

NEW YORK STATE RELEASES ANOTHER MENTAL PATIENT INTO SOCIETY.

Used intelligently, the airgun can help you get more comfortable. You may find that some pain is inevitable. But shooting the airgun for long strings can help you minimize it, and build your endurance while you're doing it.

Trigger control: without debating the merits of the various methods of causing a handgun to fire, let's look at how an airgun can help you with whatever method works best for you. First, an airgun is cheap practice. Second, the airgun lets you work on your trigger control without the distractions of noise and recoil. Third, the lack of distractions helps you coordinate your trigger control with proper grip and exact sight alignment.

Trigger control should be practiced both ways: in isolation, and in conjunction with the other fundamentals. In dry-fire, single-action, try resting the butt of the gun against your bench, then squeeze the trigger as slowly as you can. When you learn to feel every tool mark on your hammer, trigger, and sear during one squeeze, you're going slow enough. If you shoot double-action, learn it the same way. Become intimately familiar with everything going on inside the gun by what you feel in the trigger.

Everything went off without a hitch, which meant only one take was needed to get the scene right. Although the fiery crash looked authentic on air, Hubie Kearns believes that, in reality, a driver could have survived that crash. "Just by looking at the condition of the car, even though the dummy's head got knocked off, I think the person would have survived," he says. "Hollywood often creates what people believe are realities, but cars very rarely blow up. The scenes that really make me crazy are where you see the car flying off the cliff and here it is in mid-air and it blows up, as if the car goes, 'Oh my God, I'm going to die. I think I'll kill myself.'"

Here's an old story I like to tell: Once there was a man trapped in a cave. The opening was covered by a giant rock, and it was very dark inside. The man could see a glint of light high above him and he kept trying to reach it, scrambling at the walls of the cave in the pitch black. He never found the way out; he died in the dark.

One day long after, some other men came to the cave. When they rolled away the rock, light flooded in and they found the prisoner's bones lying on the ground. Right near the bones was an enormously long tunnel that led up and out of the cave. The prisoner hadn't been able to see it; the way out was right in front of him and he had died because he couldn't see it.

Mr. New York, as my friend called him, grew up in Brooklyn, lived on Broadway, worked in the Empire State Building. He even met his wife on the subway. Bill had soured on New York the night he watched a bum pissing in the subway car he was riding in and realized that it wasn't the bum that bothered him. "I knew about that guy; he's deranged," said Bill. "But what about everybody else? I mean, they just sat there. Why didn't they at least get up and get out of the car?"

Officer stabbed

Suspect was unprovoked: cops

By NATALIE P. BYFIELD and DON GENTILE

A police officer on foot patrol on a West Side street was stabbed in the back last night — allegedly by a mentally disturbed man who attacked him without provocation.

The knife blade penetrated Officer Mitchell Rachlin's bulletproof vest, but the wound was not life threatening. Rachlin, 26, a cop for three years, was in good condition at Bellevue Hospital, where he underwent surgery.

Mayor Koch, who visited Rachlin, said, "He's in good shape, smiling, appreciative of the fact that God is good and we're appreciative of that also."

Rachlin's partner, Officer Robert Horan, nabbed a man tentatively identified as Dean Glass, 33, of Riverside Drive, who allegedly jumped Rachlin at 6:50 p.m. at 45th St. and Ninth Ave.

Glass is believed to have a history of mental illness, police said.

Lt. Steve Davis, a police spokesman, said Rachlin and Horan, who work out of the W. 54th St. stationhouse, had just gone on duty.

Neither saw the attacker until he

A police officer was stabbed in the back last night while walking a foot patrol in the Hell's Kitchen section of Manhattan, police said.

Mitchell Rachlin, 26, was taken by ambulance to St. Clare's Hospital where he underwent exploratory surgery, police said.

Rachlin was later transferred to Bellevue Hospital Center. He was listed in serious but stable condition last night, police said.

A 33-year-old suspect — Dean Glass of 626 Riverside Dr., was arrested shortly after the stabbing, police said. He was charged with attempted murder of a police officer.

A knife with a three-inch blade was recovered, police said.

The attack occurred at 45th Street and Ninth Avenue at 6:50 p.m., police said.

"It appears to be unprovoked," said Police Officer Edward Feeney, a police spokesman.

appeared behind them and used a hunting knife to stab Rachlin in the upper left part of his back, Davis said.

The classic "FBI Stance" was devised to overcome this problem. It was obvious that a suspect waiting in ambush would intuitively shoot at the flashlight, and the counter-measure seemed to be to hold the flashlight at arm's length to one side. This provides some protection, but if the officer is searching inside a building, light reflected from a wall or ceiling can illuminate or silhouette him. Even without this help, the suspect merely has to fire a pattern of shots around the light he sees, with a good chance of hitting the officer. Suspects don't have to see their targets clearly before opening fire, and they don't worry about lawsuits.

"I deal with anything I want to deal with."

Cop Is Stabbed In Back

Our wounds are deep
Our minds are shallow
Because we are told
In the dirt we should wallow

Several decades ago, conventional wisdom was that the bullet with the most penetration into the target did the most damage. The advent of high-speed, hollow-point bullets put this theory into the background for awhile. A variety of cartridges appeared, and the most successful ones fired bullets at transonic or supersonic speeds for reliable expansion.

"We offer comprehensive instruction for the pistol, rifle, shotgun, machine pistol and assault carbine.

I LOVE TO FUCK & SUCK!

Horan wrestled the knife-wielder to the ground and radioed for assistance.

There have been several well-publicized "flashlight shooting stances," devised by people who named them after themselves. Those who favor such stances claim that the flashlight beam both identifies the target and dazzles the opponent so that he cannot shoot at the officer effectively. Unfortunately, this is only true when the beam is shining directly into the opponent's eyes. To do this, it is first necessary to find the opponent. The armed adversary has time to plan an ambush while the officer is still searching for him, and the flashlight beam alerts the suspect long before the officer reaches him.

The flashlight offers an excellent aiming point for the suspect, who merely needs to aim at the light and line up his sights. Because many flashlight shooting stances require the officer to keep his flashlight hand next to his gun hand to help support the weapon, the flashlight is in line with his body.

Killed sons, husband.

Defense and prosecution lawyers yesterday asked a Rockland County judge to accept an insanity plea from a mother who drowned her two young sons and then knifed her husband to death.

Lillian Rotella, 31, entered a plea of not responsible by reason of mental defect or disease before Judge William Kelly in New City.

Her lawyer, William Frank, did not challenge charges she killed her sons, Edward Thomas, 7, and Kyle, 4, and her husband, Ed-

Authorities said she believed the only escape for family members was to die and go to heaven together.

The night before the murders, the Rotellas had gone to a psychiatrist with the defendant's mother. Medicine was prescribed, but the prescription never was filled.

Frank said his client studied an anatomical drawing of the human body before the slayings.

ward, 31, before plunging a knife into her own stomach on Dec. 23.

Psychiatrists from both sides agree the woman was insane when she committed the crimes.

She has been held without bail and under a suicide watch at the Rockland County Jail since her arrest.

Frank has not sought bail, saying his goal is to have his client committed to a mental hospital as soon as possible.

If Kelly accepts her plea, the woman will be institutionalized until psychiatrists determine she no longer is a danger to herself or others.

In a rambling note written before her murderous rampage, she said an evil person was out to get her family.

The Future

Present trends are so strong that it's easy to predict some future developments. The 9mm auto pistol will surely be standard by the year 2000, almost totally replacing the revolver. We can also expect super-capacity magazines for special police units assigned to combat terrorists. There will have been a couple more changes in thinking about "stopping power," and several new types of ammunition developed as a result. However, the main emphasis will be on tactics and techniques, because hardware is only as good as the person who uses it. ■

"I am terribly sorry," I said in Chinese, "but I have recently been in an insane asylum for murdering one of my schoolmates, and it is for this reason that the American government would not let me come to China with any American money on me."

Third, in extremely cold weather any suspect confronted outdoors or in a public place may well be wearing heavy clothing. It has long been known that when a jacketed hollowpoint bullet's cavity is packed with inert fabric, it is much less likely to expand when it hits the underlying target. It is likewise agreed by experts that while 9mm ammunition needs an expanding hollowpoint to effectively stop violent encounters, a .45 caliber projectile is an effective manstopper whether or not the projectile expands. Given what we estimated to be a 25-percent to 30-percent rate of suspects whose clothing would plug hollowpoints and impede expansion, the fact that a .45 was likely to be more effective against a heavily clothed opponent gave an advantage to a weapon chambered for .45 ACP.

It is a chilly, late November evening in the steep hills of Hoot Owl Mountain, a neighborhood outside the town of Grundy, Virginia. Mark Branham, 27, is preparing for work.

An ex-cop who now works as a sergeant for a security firm, he has adjusted to civilian life. He is resting in preparation for his third shift job when two gunshots echo from the darkness in the hills above the home he shares with his elderly, deaf father.

Branham snaps upright, alert. The possibility of poachers crosses his mind, but he dismisses it almost immediately. More likely, he thinks, a hiker has become lost or injured himself on the steep and slippery hillside and fired a couple of signal shots.

Branham dresses to investigate. Because he does not really anticipate any sort of violent encounter, it never occurs to him to don his Second Chance vest, grab some spare ammo, or unlimber his scoped Remington .30-06 autoloader or any of the other powerful rifles and shotguns from the gun case. He does, more out of habit than anything else, take his service revolver.

The gun is a Smith & Wesson Combat Magnum, Model 19-3, with four-inch barrel. It used to be his police service revolver, and he's spent money getting it right. The action is smooth and glassy, the sights are high visibility Millets, the finish by Armaalloy gives it a stainless look, and the low-profile walnut grips are by Art Jewell.

For controllable recoil and muzzle flash, he has chosen 110 grain .357 semi-jacketed hollowpoint ammo by CCI-Speer. The usual six rounds are in the chambers as he tucks the revolver into his right hip pocket.

On the way up the hill, he stops at his pickup truck for his multi-cell police-style flashlight. He leaves the Remington 870 12 gauge riot gun; there seems no need for it. He continues on up the hill.

Soon, he spies a familiar figure. It is his next-door neighbor, Burton Owens, 61. Owens is holding a heavy miner's lantern. Branham relaxes. No problem.

The men begin talking. Owens explains that he has shot and killed a cat. "A wild-cat?" Branham's question is eager. Seeing no long gun in sight, he assumes the older man has killed a lynx with his revolver. A hunter himself who has often stalked game with Owens, Branham knows his neighbor to be so good a shot that he kills squirrels and other small pot animals firing one-hand, offhand, with his long barrel Smith & Wesson .38 Special.

Owens replies that it wasn't a wildcat he shot, just a housecat. Branham asks why. Taking the comment as judgmental, Owens raises his voice and begins a tirade about how Branham and his father don't show him sufficient respect.

That's enough for the young ex-cop. He has smelled alcohol on Burton Owens' breath, and will state later that he has long known that the man can be violent when he's liquored up.

Mark Branham now makes the mistake that is nearly his last. Rising to leave, he turns away from his longtime neighbor and says, "It don't look like you need any help here."

Burton Owens growls back, "You never been any help to me in your life!"

And swings the heavy miner's lantern.

Admits killing mother

Stephen Davis, 24, of Rockville Centre, L.I., interrupted jury selection in his murder trial yesterday to plead guilty. "I strangled my mother," said Davis, when asked by the judge to state what he had done.

He told police he had choked his mother with his hands, cut her throat with a kitchen knife and then strangled her with a bicycle chain before submerging her in a bathtub.

- Frequent Urination
- Painful Urination
- Urgency to Urinate
- Dribbling

It crashes into Mark Branham's skull and he goes down from the impact, sliding toward the bottom of the hill. His flashlight flies from his hand, coming to rest in the frozen leaves and casting an eerie white glow over the death battle that is to follow.

As Branham falls Owens is on him, raining blows. Some are with the lantern, whose lens breaks from the repeated impact; some are believed to be from the still-loaded revolver he used to shoot the housecat. It is a blue steel, five-inch Smith & Wesson Model 10.

As they roll downward together, the Combat Magnum slips from Branham's hip pocket and somehow comes under his hand. He grabs it and lashes out at his antagonist with it, yelling, "What's wrong with you?"

They are still clubbing each other, over-hand. Branham's skull is deeply dented, leaving him with permanently impaired vision, recurring headaches that will last for years if not the rest of his life, and lacerations that will take from 50 to 70 stitches to close, depending on which doctor and emergency room nurse has the best memory.

Why do street and prison gangs exist, and what is their impact on society? What are the most effective techniques for investigating gang activities? This complete text tells it all. For police, probation officers, lawyers, and criminologists. Softback, 137 pages.

Yet the grizzled ex-coal miner is not deterred. And now Branham, who knows Burton Owens still has to have the gun he killed the cat with, hears him utter the most chilling words the young man has ever heard in his life.

"You son of a bitch, I'll kill you!"

There is no conscious thought. The training he has had with the gun takes over as Branham faces the imminence of his own death.

He fires one shot.

The 110 grain semi-jacketed hollowpoint bullet roars out of the Combat Magnum's barrel. It tears through Burton Owens' clothing and enters his left armpit toward the rear. It tracks straight through across the chest, stopping at the corresponding point toward the rear of the right armpit, inside the body. Mushrooming as it went, it has inflicted terrible damage, side-to-side.

Burton Owens slumps to the ground. He lies still. The Smith & Wesson Model 10 lies at his feet. Two chambers are unloaded, two contain spent cartridge casings from the cat shooting, and the other two contain live Winchester-Western 158 grain roundnose lead .38 Special rounds.

- Gang graffiti is a warning to be taken seriously. Through it, gangs are giving you notice of their presence and activities.
- Learn to read your local gang graffiti.
- Attempt to have business and property owners remove graffiti as soon as possible.
- Crime scene photographs should include any graffiti in the area.
- Be proactive rather than reactive to gang graffiti.

SUSPECT IN BID TO KILL COPS FREED BY MISTAKE

By GENE RUFFINI

A man indicted for trying to kill two cops with a submachine gun was mistakenly released from court yesterday and is now the object of a manhunt, The Post has learned.

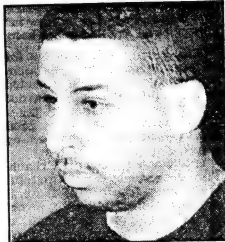

Hector Ramos, 20, walked out of the courtroom of Criminal Court Justice Leslie Snyder after his wife posted $15,000 bail on an illegal-weapons charge.

Unknown to the judge and the assistant district attorney, Ramos had also been indicted by a grand jury on a charge of attempted murder of two cops last Tuesday.

They agreed on the bail for the lesser charge because of a snafu — the paperwork on the attempted-murder rap was not included in Ramos' court papers, court sources told The Post.

Style and technique are more important than tools. Another case in point occurred in Florida: a cop who'd finally been issued the 16-shot 9mm he'd long argued for, responded along with a partner who'd been perfectly happy with his revolver and a bit resented having to carry the new technique. They were tracking a homicidal gunman armed with a high-powered rifle.

When the encounter came, the cop who'd been begging for firepower had his chance to use it: he sprayed all 16 9mm bullets at the criminal and never touched him. The wheelgun-oriented cop played the auto the way his career had taught him to play his revolver: make every shot count. He fired twice, hitting the gunman once in the leg and once in the chest, killing him outright. Another cop who knows him swears that with his familiar sixgun, this officer would have put them both in the center X-ring.

20-23: The Criminal Justice Center Police Academy at Sam Houston State University is offering Critical Incident and Hostage Situation Management in Huntsville, Texas. The cost is $225 per person, $200 for two or more officers. The course will be taught by a team of instructors led by Mr. Howard Teten. Teten, a retired police officer and FBI agent, was one of the developers of the FBI's hostage negotiations procedures and trained many negotiators at Quantico, Va. Topics covered will include principles of critical incident management, media relations during a crisis, SWAT and HRT selection and tactics, managing hostage negotiations, and case studies on the Edmond, Okla., mass shooting and the Palm Bay, Fla., shooting incident.

Daffy Dispatches

James Faraday was listening to his police radio when he heard the following dispatch: "Any car in vicinity of Hillwood Towers Apartments—go to parking lot and check report of 68-year-old man sitting naked on curb."

As he drove, James wondered how the dispatcher knew the man's age. Minutes later, a clarification call followed: "Correction on previous report. Check '68 Oldsmobile parked by curb. It has been stripped."

He put me up against a tree by my throat and said, "You bitch! Don't you ever accuse me of cheating on you again, or I'll beat your head in!" I said, "Jeff, you're hurting me." I looked into his eyes, and something must have clicked because he let go of me,

The city of Baltimore is proud of its excellent K-9 unit. But one day, a woman returned from work to find her house had been robbed. She called the police, and a K-9 officer patrolling nearby was the first to arrive. With his dog on a leash by his side, he knocked at her door. When the woman saw him, she wailed, "Not only do I come home from work to find all my things stolen, but when I call the police, what do they do? They send me a blind policeman!"

Janice Fuller, who works as a dispatcher for the Greenville Police Department, lives within walking distance of the station. One morning it was raining so heavily that she called the office and asked them to send a patrol car around to pick her up.

As she was walking out the door, the phone rang and she overheard her seven-year-old daughter say, "She's not here right now. The cops just picked her up."

New York City.

Brooklyn: Bloodhounds and other dogs have been used for years by the police. I have a much better idea: Animal researchers have proven pigs to be far more intelligent than dogs. Additionally, their sense of smell is much keener. And in a typical city scenario, would a fleeing felon be more frightened when confronted or pursued by a 75-pound, jad-eyed, droopy-eared dog or a quarter-ton of squealing, charging ham on the hoof?

■ DeWitt Daniel Hooks had already been confined in two state psychiatric hospitals. Now he was out and the little things were bothering him again.

The big commercial jets landing at Los Angeles International Airport a few miles away were too noisy. The neighbors across the street were always laughing at him. He was having trouble remembering things, and once mentioned to his father that he was going to die young.

DeWitt Hooks was living on the edge. And so was the neighborhood around Van Ness and 83rd Street. He occasionally liked to walk out of his modest tract home and fire a few rounds from one of his several weapons. Two years earlier, a SWAT team had to remove him from his house and take his guns. At about the same time, a couple of local gang members ran into him on the street, took his money and left him with a broken jaw and heightened sense of paranoia.

Finally, on November 5, 1986, he walked into the Western Surplus store on South Western Avenue in Los Angeles and bought an 8mm Mauser rifle. Five months later, he stood in front of his house and shot people as fast as he could find targets and work the bolt of the vintage weapon.

DeWitt Hooks began his rampage by randomly firing a few rounds into the neighborhood. When he spotted 46-year-old William Britt standing on the sidewalk across the street, Hooks calmly, almost methodically, raised his rifle and shot Britt in the face.

"Well, dog fuck it!"

DeWitt Hooks found himself looking into the bores of two Remington shotguns, a Colt .357 magnum and a 9mm S&W Model 59. He also heard four police officers tell him in every conceivable way to drop his weapon. His response came right out of a bad movie. He gradually stopped walking, pulled a pair of goggles down over his eyes and glanced back and forth at the two police units. He then lowered the barrel of his rifle, leaned forward and fired one round at Officers Mylar and Ragan.

The bullet split the officers and shattered the back window of their patrol unit. Their answer was swift, although not immediately deadly. Eight rounds of 00 buck, four .357 magnum rounds and 14 9mm rounds tore into and around DeWitt Hooks as he tried to slide another bullet into the bolt-action rifle. Officers Ragan and Gland discarded their shotguns and drew their duty weapons. Ragan recalled later that he was vividly aware that he would need to reload as quickly as possible after firing six rounds, and wished he was holding a semi-automatic instead of the wheel gun he had carried for several years.

Officer Gland was able to fire an additional six rounds. Hooks staggered backwards and fell, still clutching his rifle to his chest. He struggled to get up, but fell back and laid motionless.

Police Chase Nets Two Assault Rifles

The Associated Press

Passengers in a car that may have been stolen pitched out two loaded assault rifles and magazines with extra ammunition as a police car chased them through Queens early yesterday, police said.

The car got away after a patrol supervisor ordered an end to the chase, but the officers recovered the weapons and the ammunition, the police said.

The chase began after officers saw the car shortly after 3 a.m. in Ridgewood, Queens, and thought it might have been stolen, said Sgt. Raymond O'Donnell, a police spokesman. When the officers tried to stop it, the car took off, O'Donnell said.

During the chase, the car's three occupants threw out a rifle on Putnam Avenue. About a block later, they threw out a second rifle and the extra magazines, O'Donnell said.

The officers recovered an AK-47 assault rifle with 70 live rounds in a drum magazine, an accessory that provides extra ammunition. The police also recovered a J-15 rifle with 90 rounds in a drum magazine and two more magazines containing 36 and 90 rounds.

Robinson, who late one Sunday night lurched drunkenly into a Church's outlet, shoved his way to the front of the line, and ordered a three-piece box of fried chicken. Persuaded to wait his turn, he reached the counter again five or ten minutes later, only to be told that Church's had run out of fried chicken. The young woman at the counter suggested that he might like chicken nuggets instead. Robinson responded to the suggestion by slugging her in the head. That set off a chain of events that ended with Robinson's being shot dead by a security guard.

It's widely accepted that the painter, who killed himself in 1890 at the age of 37, suffered from some sort of psychosis.

When my boyfriend and I started having sex, I went on the Pill. It costs about $25 a month and I think he should help pay. He says he feels weird about paying up the bill, but I'm mad: What a cheapskate!

The boy planned his suicide in eerie detail. He had decided either to hang himself from his living room balcony with a jump rope or fire the shotgun into his mouth—"if I could reach the trigger and do it in the woods, so I wouldn't mess up the house."

As Sack turned to lead the way out of the back door to his plain unit parked in the alley, Thomas produced a two-inch Colt revolver and shot him three times in the upper back. One of the bullets clipped a major vein leading to his heart, killing him almost instantly. Sack probably never knew what hit him as he sagged to the ground just outside the door.

Thomas then turned on his wife, plunging an eight-inch knife into her body five times. She ran screaming from the house and into the arms of neighbors, only to die in surgery later that day.

In the roughly two minutes that elapsed between the shooting of Sack and the arrival of the first police units, Stephen Thomas prepared for battle. He moved to the rear of the house and bathed the kitchen in gasoline, setting a trap for any assault through the back door. He also left some gas in the can and jammed a cloth wick into the spout. Then he grabbed a .22 rifle and waited.

and young people whose feet were still growing were hurt the most by the leather shortage. When I outgrew my shoes, new leather shoes were simply not available.

The ration was two pairs of wooden-soled shoes a year. The soles were made of three separate pieces of wood. When the flesh of the foot, especially the ball, got between the pieces, they pinched painfully. I tried to solve that problem by bandaging my feet and then putting heavy woolen stockings over the bandages. If I didn't stay out too long in the snow or rain, the bandage helped protect my feet, too. But in the summer the bandages made my feet sweat badly, gave them blisters, and made them look ugly.

My mother, of course, and other adults could still wear their old leather shoes. She would have given me her shoes, but my feet were already two sizes larger than hers. When it was wet, my mother stood in the food lines for me. "The toes are soft!" she said disdainfully.

They chose a pair of linen pumps that made Jean, who had never worn high heels before, feel as if she were going to pitch forward on her face. When the salesman assured her that the shoes fit correctly, she opened the box from the dress shop and carefully matched the sash to the right shade of brown on the salesman's color card. The shoes would be ready for her to pick up two days later.

"That will give me time to practice walking in heels," Jean told Sue, as they left the shoe store. Then she gave a sigh of pure happiness. A date with Johnny, a pretty new dress, and high heels—all at the same time. "You wear your pretty dress and your new shoes and take him to the dance and have a good time," said Mrs. Jarrett.

"I'm not going to put up with this at all!" she announced, on the edge of tears. "I have no intention of crippling my toes!"

"And if you don't mind my making a suggestion," continued the clerk, "some linen pumps tinted to match the brown in the sash would set the dress off."

Pumps with heels to make her look taller!

Mr. Jarrett rubbed the soles of Jean's new shoes with sandpaper and, feeling more secure, she wore the shoes every possible moment until it was time to dress for the dance. Jean stepped into the living room, closed the door, started to turn off the light, remembered that Sue probably had not come in, and walked in her stocking feet to the kitchen. Then she tiptoed into the bedroom, sat down on the bed, and began to rub one aching foot. she accompanied Homer to the little grass shack made out of crepe paper, and accepted a paper cup of pineapple punch from Homer. It was so cold and refreshing that for an instant Jean wished she could pour it over her toes.

Jean practiced wearing her brown linen pumps. She walked across the carpet, she walked on the bare floor. She danced forward, she danced backward, she whirled in circles, Jean stood on her left foot and wiggled the toes on her right foot. Jean had to shove to get her shoes back on again.

"Yes, there is the dress," agreed Jean. Her lovely plain dress with the shoes tinted to match the sash. Where would she ever wear them if she did not wear them to the dance?

Body under train

The body of a Brooklyn man was found yesterday trapped under a subway car that dragged him several hundred feet along the tracks before coming to a halt, a transit official said.

The body of Michael Dunne, 29, of W. 12th St., was found at 10:25 a.m. under the third car of an IND F train that stopped just south of the Church Ave. station in Flatbush, said Sgt. Robert Valentino.

Hook & nabber

A subway rider helped police subdue a man wielding a 2-foot-long meat hook in a crowded Brooklyn subway station last night.

Joseph Lomanto, 37, of Brooklyn, helped transit cops restrain and disarm the man at the DeKalb Ave. station in Brooklyn about 6 p.m., police said.

The suspect, Rafael Hickey, 41, of Manhattan, was taken to Woodhull Hospital for mental observation.

I've had my share of bliss and sorrow
But know not if I'll have tomorrow
So, for what we've shared in sweet accord
Today, I thank You, loving Lord.

In 1986, 13 years after my release, I went to purchase a license plate for my van. On the spur of the moment I asked the clerk, "Do you have a plate with any sixes on it?" She regarded me like an escapee from the netherworld, but I got the plate.

Only after I returned to the states did I find out that "666" was the sign of the antichrist.

Jean could not help admiring the girls who were such good dancers they could risk their toes. When the music started, Jean managed to shove her foot into her shoe, which was a size too small. Around and around they danced, repeating the same steps over and over.

Around and around the floor they circled. Jean's feet, unaccustomed to high heels, began to hurt. She thought perhaps she should have bought a larger pair of shoes and caught herself leaning heavily on Homer's shoulder to relieve the pressure on her toes. Quickly she straightened. Her poor, poor toes.

When the music stopped, Jean slipped off one shoe and wiggled her toes. Ahh. Bliss. Pure bliss. Each step was more painful than the one before, and when the music stopped, Jean stood on her right foot and wiggled the toes of her left foot while she stared wretchedly at the basketball foul-line painted on the floor. "Remember your dress and your high heels,"

Either Jean's feet were growing or her shoes were shrinking. The whole situation suddenly struck Jean as being hilariously funny and she wanted to laugh. Jean was able to look around her. She noticed on the bleachers a number of pairs of girls' shoes, and when she looked at the girls on the dance floor, she discovered many had been dancing in their stocking feet.

"That crunching sound you have been hearing," remarked Homer, "is the sound of toes being stepped on."

When they climbed into the car, Jean realized that she did not even know where Homer lived. How heavenly it was to be able to take off both her shoes!

"Homer, I think I had better go in," said Jean.

Homer got out of the car, went around, and opened the door for her. This time Jean could not bear to shove her feet into her pumps. She picked up her shoes and her florist's box and stepped out of the car in her stocking feet.

Jean was still sitting on the bed tenderly massaging her foot when she heard a car stop in front of the house,

Jean rose from the bed and walked gingerly to the closet. She wished she were floating on a cloud like Sue—then her feet might not hurt so much.

Also included on the car are dark royal blue bullet-proof windows, duel rocket missile launchers, and twin front laser mounts.

Dear Taxpayer

In reviewing your tax return(s) for the above year(s), we noticed that you claimed the zero bracket amount. Available information indicates you would be claimed as a dependent on your parent's or guardian's tax return(s) for the above year(s).

We are proposing a correction that will increase your tax as shown below because you had less earned income (for example, wages) than the zero bracket amount deduction taken. A taxpayer who could be claimed as a dependent on another person's tax return is allowed to claim the zero bracket amount only to the extent that earned income is reported. Any earned income is subtracted from your zero bracket amount and the remainder is added to your adjusted gross income before your tax is figured on the Tax Table. Only a Form 1040 can be used in this situation, not a Form 1040A or Form 1040EZ.

Psychologist David Perry interviewed 165 boys and girls in third through sixth grade, asking them to identify classmates they disliked and to name those who got bullied by others. Perry found that victims may be nonaggressive or very aggressive.

Both earn the rejection of their peers, but the aggressive group was especially disliked. Perry says these children may be at high risk for problems later in life. "They persist in aggression," he says, "even though they keep losing and it gets them into trouble."

The reason the nonaggressive victims are picked on is more difficult to fathom. Perry suspects they may "radiate anxiety or low self-esteem, and the bullies pick up on it."

TARGETS — "If you are going to train to shoot people, then your targets should look like people. Few suspects dress up to look like bull's-eyes. When you look through that scope, the first things that jump out at you are the eyes. You see a living human being — possibly your next door neighbor — in your sights. I teach with targets that show life-size faces. The targets that show a hostage with a gun to her head and the bad guy's head next to hers are good."

Girl shot in face

A 12-year-old girl was shot in the face in Brooklyn last night after she rejected sexual overtures from three teenage boys, police said.

The girl, whose name was not revealed by police, left her mother's double-parked car at 53d St. and Sixth Ave. in Brooklyn to run a quick errand in a nearby store, police said.

As she left the shop about 7:15 p.m., the boys approached her. When the girl ducked into the car to escape them, one of the boys pulled out a handgun and shot her. She was in good condition at Methodist Hospital. No one was apprehended in the incident.

Shots fired on street

A 20-year-old East New York man opened fire on a crowded Downtown Brooklyn street with a .357-magnum yesterday afternoon and was arrested as he fled the area on foot, Police Department officials reported. The shooting occurred at about 2 p.m. near the corner of Jay and Willoughby Sts. when Jonathan Murray became involved in a dispute with an unidentified man. Murray, of Wortman Ave. allegedly whipped out the gun and fired five shots as he chased the other man along Willoughby St., police said. Police said he was captured at Johnson and Lawrence Sts. after he ran out of bullets. Murray was charged with attempted murder, menacing and criminal possession of a weapon. The weapon was recovered from Murray, police said, with five spent shells in the cylinder. Murray was allegedly carrying five live bullets in his pocket.

But to call these creatures killers is unfair. A more accurate, though less sexy, moniker would be Defensive Bees, for that's the characteristic that distinguishes "Africanized" honeybees (Apis mellifera scutellata) from their close relatives, the common European honeybees. "It's not like swarms of Africanized bees will randomly attack people on street corners," says Orley Taylor, professor of entomology at the University of Kansas in Lawrence. "But when a hive of Africanized honeybees is disturbed, its defensive reaction is quicker, more potent and much more aggressive than would be the case with European honeybees."

Using this technology, Zambone has devised some of the strangest special-purpose ammunition around. His armor piercing (AP) police loads in 10mm, .41 and .44 magnums will defeat Threat Level 11 armor, or pickup truck doors, but won't ricochet any appreciable distance.

Note, however, that my test ammunition, all non-AP loads, didn't penetrate the panel of an American Body Armor Threat Level 11 vest, nor was there excessive backface deformation. The same loads exhibited superb tactical penetration in walls and wood, sufficient to neutralize an adversary hidden behind a door or wall.

Further tests showed that when a MagSafe round hits flesh, ballistic clay or plastic water filled jugs, the effect is best described as "grenade like." Immense hydrostatic shock comes from terminal velocities that are far faster than standard. In fact, in many calibers MagSafe can boast the "world's fastest ammunition." Velocities of 1,800+ feet per second (fps) in 5-inch barrels are common with MagSafe.

His premier subject, that April day, was a transient known only as S.E., who had been arrested in a train station, wandering aimlessly and speaking gibberish. He was hospitalized only for observation, and knew nothing of the experiment that was about to be performed on him. The tongs were applied to his head and 80 volts sent through his brain. He jerked but did not convulse. When the doctors raised the possibility of trying again, the man's incoherence suddenly disappeared. He said emphatically, "Non una seconda. Mortifere!"; "Not another. It will kill me." Cerletti upped the voltage to 110, and S.E. became the first human to suffer a grand mal seizure intentionally induced with electricity.

NOT CONFIDENTIAL

The media feel the masses are not educated enough, sophisticated enough, or even bright enough to make sound decisions. Consequently, as self-styled guardians of the community conscience, they feel compelled to guide us in any significant decision making. While they don't always tell us exactly what to think, they do tell us what to think about. They slant the facts toward the desired result. Public opinion is easily shaped on issues that people know little or nothing about.

Prevying on the Vulnerable -- A psychologist testified in federal court last month that he sold names and Social Security numbers of patients in psychiatric hospitals in New York and Vermont to a drug smuggler. After the testimony, Stuart H. Newton was convicted in Rhode Island of smuggling 10 tons of hashish into the U.S. in 1983. He used the patients' identities to obtain fraudulent passports for himself and his confederates. Because they were confined at Pilgrim State Hospital on Long Island and a psychiatric institution in Brattleboro, Vt., there was little chance that the rightful owners of the identities would discover the fraud. Before he testified, the psychologist, Roger Kramer, poked. He did manage to say on the stand that it never occurred to him that Newton might use the names illegally. Testifying under a grant of immunity, Kramer said in federal court in Providence that in 1977 he sold six New York names, birth dates, and Social Security numbers for $600. In 1980 in Vermont he sold another ten identities for $3000.

The round nose .38 slug hit Frank in the abdomen and tore through his insides, stopping at the spine. At the sound of the explosion and with the force of the impact Frank tensed his entire body, bending the cuffs which he held in his hand and then throwing them to the other side of his car. The force of the bullet spun Frank around, but did not knock him down. From deep in his mind Frank reacted with the only weapon he had, his Mace. He began to spray it at Hawthorne, who began to dance around, dodging the spray. As he moved Hawthorne fired his second shot, this time hitting Frank in the left thigh. The bullet Passed through without hitting bone or artery and Frank thought to himself, "Now that was a lucky shot."

CAUGHT RED-FOOTED!

A man was recently arrested in Palmdale, California for sucking a saleswoman's toes without her consent. Allegedly, he came into the store, told the clerk he was studying to be a podiatrist and that "feet really turned him on." He managed to convince the saleswoman to take off her shoes, then lay on his belly in front of the checkout counter and began touching her feet. When he took her toes into his mouth, the clerk ran away. This could be the first digital (toe) rape in the country and we urge readers to keep their toe sucking among consent-ing partners!

Judge: Mr. G., you're accused of killing five people and injuring seventeen others. It's said you're the Freeway Killer, the L.A. Roadwarrior, the nut who shoots at other motorists for minor traffic infractions and small discourtesies. How do you plead?

Mr. G: Guilty, your Honor, but with an explanation.

Judge: All right. Let's hear it.

Mr. G: Well, your Honor, there's no denying I shot and killed those five. But, during the two month period when I was terrorizing the Freeways, traffic volume dropped by 21%, most drivers were scared into being more courteous, and the total number of Freeway traffic fatalities actually declined from over a hundred a year ago to about seventy-five this year. What I'm driving at, your honor, is—thanks to me—twenty-five people who otherwise would have been dead are still alive. I don't think I deserve any punishment. Why, the California Highway Traffic Safety Board should be giving me a testimonial.

Stockton Massacre

On January 17, 1989, morning recess was suddenly interrupted as dozens of screaming school children scattered to escape the slaughter. On this cold, crisp mid-day in Stockton, Calif., thoughts of schoolyard games ended when the heavily-armed Patrick E. Purdy killed five children and injured 29 others, including a teacher, before he committed suicide on the Cleveland Elementary playground.

Described as a "troubled drifter" by police reports, Purdy fired more than 110 rounds of an AK-47 assault rifle into the terrified children. Although not under the influence of narcotics at the time of that attack, Purdy was a known drug user and had a lengthy history of encounters with law enforcement agencies along the West Coast, for offenses involving narcotics, weapons charges and prostitution.

Initially, San Joaquin public safety agencies heard reports of a car fire. Less than a minute later, shots were reported fired at the elementary school across the street from the carfire location. Seconds later, there was still another horrifying message: "Children are down—shots still being fired."

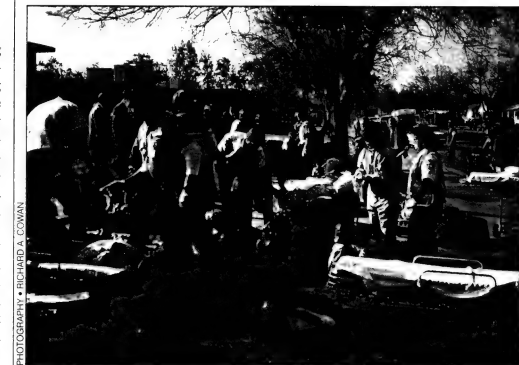

Purdy had ignited the car with a sparkler, apparently to draw the children to the fenced portion of the schoolyard in which he waited. As the curious youngsters came near, he opened fire with his weapon. Apparently unfamiliar with an automatic weapon, Purdy fanned the assault rifle, uncontrollably strafing the buildings, the asphalt, and the people with long series of firings. Before the gunfire ended, Purdy would empty three clips.

"The Stockton massacre exemplifies why the assault rifle should be outlawed," declares Dr. Garen Wintemute.

As a police reader suggests (see letters in next month's issue): "If we don't enact sensible legislation now, another geek like Purdy will crawl out of the toilet and mow down more innocent kids with his unregistered Kalashnikov."

Scores of police and rescue workers attend to the dead and wounded after the tragedy in Stockton, Calif.

Dr. Wintemute is an assistant professor of family practice at the University of California, School of Medicine (Davis, Calif.). He is considered to be one of the nation's leading authorities on firearm injuries and deaths.

"The pro-gun people are going to say 'it's not the gun, it's the person.' But when someone like Purdy wanders onto a children's school playground, fires 110 rounds and hits 36 moving targets, the choice of weapon is critical. This would not have happened to this degree if he had used a handgun," said Wintemute.

Many of the injured children sustained major, life-threatening injuries. Loss of life was reduced because of the fast response by emergency medical teams, according to the San Joaquin Disaster coordinator, Dr. Gordon Buys. The powerful weapon caused wounds that caused one nurse to recall her Vietnam war experiences. One bullet passed completely through the metal monkey bars. Another travelled through three walls, injuring a child on the exit.

Legislation has been introduced in Sacramento's statehouse by Senator David Roberti (D-Hollywood) and Assemblyman Mike Roos (D-Los Angeles) banning non-military sale of assault rifles. "These weapons were designed for the sole purpose of killing people—but enemy soldiers, not innocent children," reminds Wintemute.

The AK-47 assault rifle is manufactured in China and is widely sold throughout the United States to gun collectors and self-styled survivalists. In several communities, including Los Angeles, cash bounties have been extended to all persons turning in automatic weapons to the authorized agency.

The motive for the shooting remains unknown. As the City of Stockton returns to its routine, the aftermath and fallout still affect all of Purdy's innocent victims, including the law enforcement personnel.

Bernard Greenberg, a forensic entomologist, tells a story about a homicide in China almost a thousand years ago. It seems a man was killed with a sickle in a farming community. The local man in charge lines up all the men with sickles and tells them to put their sickles on the ground in front of them. In a few minutes, flies begin to congregate on this particular sickle. "You are guilty," says the local investigator to the man standing by this sickle. The man confesses.

Greenberg cannot vouch for the truth of this story, but he does know it is part of Chinese lore. What he does know to be true is that flies can be helpful in solving crimes, especially homicide, and also that flies have a sense of smell that puts a bloodhound to shame.

"You see," Greenberg explains, "that sickle gave the man away because, no matter how much he tried to wipe off the blade there was still enough material left on it to attract a fly. They are truly amazing. They can smell decomposing flesh from at least a mile away."

Officer Survival Manual

by D. Rutledge

Written for the field officer this book covers stress, traffic risks, field threats, and wounds and injury, and how their damaging effects can be minimized. No subtlety here...Rutledge lays it on the line. Sold only to law enforcement personnel. Softback, 351 pages.

It's nine years ago. There's this little girl named Andi, who's eight. She's hanging out with her best friend, Chad, in a big field that's right next to her apartment building in southern California. They're playing catch. And they get into a fight over some stupid thing. Andi throws the ball really far, so Chad will have to run to get it. He does. They are right near the railroad tracks, and Andi can see a train coming. Chad is starting to cross the tracks. She yells to him to come back. But he has to get the ball, and it's on the other side. So he runs over the tracks, but his foot gets caught. And she sees the train coming closer and hears Chad screaming, but she goes numb. She can't believe what's happening. Closer and closer, the train comes. And then the screams stop.

It's about 5:00 in the afternoon. Andi walks around in a daze for hours. But she doesn't tell anybody. She doesn't go get help. "I wasn't sure how to handle it," she says. "I mean, I thought I'd just wake up the next morning and go over to his house, and he'd be there."

"A 16-year-old girl involved in a skiing accident had hit a tree, broke her neck and was killed in our jurisdiction. I notified dispatch to call a minister to meet me at her parent's house before I went into the home to tell the parents what had happened. Then he showed up. He came in rejoicing, like this was wonderful news. He told the parents this was the greatest day of their lives, their daughter had gone on to her reward. He was all smiles, shaking hands. Believe me, his attitude went over like a lead balloon. The parents were upset. They were religious people, but the way he reacted to the death of their daughter was inappropriate. They almost kicked him out of the house," remembers Walker.

"Many still find it hard to believe that children as young as five or six can sincerely wish to die—and that some actually do commit suicide. . . . It is commonly but mistakenly believed that children do not comprehend the meaning of death. In most cases, it is exactly because children do understand the meaning of death that they wish to die."

Embittered, Bert secretly became Mr. Big, mob boss. He anonymously engineered a major money-laundering operation in Port Charles, while publicly conducting an investigation of "Tumble Dry." As his greed and viciousness grew, Bert ordered hits on various people: Frisco, Felicia, Robert and Duke. Luckily, his cockeyed marksman misfired, but did execute an old lady named Tessie. Scorpio eventually figured out the scam. He apprehended Ramsey shortly after his police retirement party. Bert lost his marbles, lapsed into a catatonic state and was consigned to a sanitarium. Case closed.

The NICE thing about deadly force is that its existence or even possible existence is very often enough to make its use unnecessary.

And they tell her she is a disgrace to the family, and that they don't want her to have their last name. Her father wants her to move. They are disowning her. "Huh?" is Andi's reply.

As I approached the building the sound of moaning, punctuated by deep laughs, was clearly audible. The rear of the church contained two small, dirty windows at eye level, through which I looked. Although the interior of the church was dark by comparison with the blazing outdoors sunlight, I could pick out the forms of two naked black men torturing a young white woman whom I assumed to be a nun or teacher. She had been stripped naked and was stretched out in the aisle of the church, arms pulled tightly over her head by one of the rebels, while the other knelt on her stomach and repeatedly touched her nipples with a burning cigarette. She had burn marks on her face and neck as well. Uniforms of the Katangese Gendarmerie were thrown over the back of a pew, and female garments were scattered near the door. A Soviet-made Mosin-Nagant M1944 carbine lay in the aisle beside the young woman. Another rifle had been left leaning against the wall near the uniforms. There appeared to be no one else present in the church.

There had been two nuns at Okonda: the young one we saved, and an older one we didn't. When I first entered the church I was standing slightly behind the altar, and off to the left side. From that position I couldn't see the front of the altar, a rather large affair made of rough-hewn wood with a cross towering above it. Perhaps it was a good thing I could not, for the rebels had used the altar to butcher the old nun.

They had stripped her naked, but had not assaulted her sexually, probably because she was elderly, and obese. Instead, they sat her upright with her back to the altar, and nailed her hands to it in apparent mimicry of the crucifixion. Then they cut off her breasts with a bayonet and, in a final act of savagery, drove the bayonet through her mouth into the altar behind, impaling her in an upright sitting position. Evidence of a struggle showed that she had not died instantly from the bayonet wound, but had probably succumbed to the loss of blood.

We found the owner of the male genitalia tied spread-eagle in the middle of the village compound, with the nun's breasts attached to his chest with sharpened sticks. He was still alive but had lost much blood. We had no means of transfusion, so we stopped the bleeding as best we could. He died two hours later. The rebels had partly completed a scarecrow in the compound. The priest's smock was draped over the frame, which had been prepared for his head and hands with razor sharp spikes. I thought they were simply waiting for him to die.

She calls for world peace now. She prophesies that Russia will glorify the Lord, in The Madonna of Medjugorje, the story of the apparitions of the Virgin Mary in Yugoslavia. The rebels bounded to their feet to face us, eyes staring wildly. I was carrying a Sterling 9mm SMG with the bayonet fixed, which I leveled at the two naked men. We were no more than 15 feet apart.

The one who had been holding the nun's arms was visibly shaking with fear, his eyes flying uncontrollably about the room. In a second they rested on the rifle lying in the aisle. The nun had rolled onto her stomach, clutching her breasts and rocking from side to side, moaning in pain.

"Don't be a fool, man," I cautioned. But he did it anyway.

In a burst of panic he emitted a loud, piercing wail and dove for the rifle. Landing on his knees he grabbed the weapon, and turning his terrified face to mine, attempting to bring the weapon to bear. My first burst caught him in the face, the second full in the chest. He was dead before he fell over, a body missing most of his head.

The second terrorist began to wave his arms frantically up and down, like a featherless black bird attempting to take flight. His eyes kept flitting back and forth between the muzzle of the Sterling and his own weapon, which was leaning against the wall a good 10 feet away. By now the whole village had erupted into battle, with the loud "rrup, rrup, rrup" of the rifle sections' LMGs dominant.

"Don't do it, don't do it," I ordered. But he emitted a loud "Yaaa..." and scrambled for the rifle. I warned him again but he grabbed the weapon, worked the action to place a round in the chamber, and began to swing the muzzle toward me.

"KILL HIM, GODDAMIT!" screamed Cpl. Edgerton, who had by now entered the church behind us. "KILL HIM, NOW!"

The rebel terrorist was now fully facing me, desperately attempting to swing the long barrel of the bolt-action rifle across his body to align it with my chest. His eyes locked on mine — wild, frantic eyes surrounded by fields of white. They never left mine, not even when the powerful SMG rounds tore into his stomach, walked up his chest, and cut the carotid artery on the left side of his neck. His body hit the floor with a thud, blown apart by the blast of the Sterling, and still the eyes remained riveted to mine. Then his body relaxed and the eyes dilated, blind in death.

"Come here, Freedom," Michael calls out. We're sitting on the couch in his house after dinner. A dog, a sweet, lively, part-German shepherd, part-collie (yes, a mongrel) bounds over to us. "I want to show you his trick," Michael says to me. "Siege Heil," he says loudly, and the dog puts his paw out, Hitler style.

You could easily hear of food/medicine distribution plans over the C.D. network as well as radiation levels, what highways are not torn up (bridges out etc.), law enforcement searching for mercenaries, etc. and etc. This is good information for you to be checking in on.

And, the Second Amendment Foundation has been leaked a copy of an "official memorandum" issued by the "Educational Fund to End Handgun Violence", a front for the gun grabbers that outlines their plans to ban semi-automatic pistols, rifles and shotguns. It states,

"...menacing looks coupled with the public's confusion over fully automatic machine guns versus semi-automatic ...can only increase that chance of public support for restrictions on these weapons."

In their effort to mislead the public, the gun grabbers call every gun under a foot long a "Saturday Night Special" and every gun over a foot long an "Assault Rifle."

This new and dangerous "anti-gun" trend began in earnest in January of 1989 when a sick individual opened fire on children in a schoolyard in Stockton, California.

You see, anti-gun politicians, media and gun grabbing groups are using this horrible incident to ride on the wave of emotions of a concerned public.

Stockton Shooting

Burrowing animals are tough. If you don't hit a chuck or a prairie dog vitally and do a lot of damage, he'll make it into his den. In most cases, these varmints aren't eaten, so ideal handloads call for a lot of tissue damage. Since the game isn't large, penetration usually isn't a problem, and lightweight, rapid-expanding bullets are generally the best choice. To get the best expansion, high velocity is required.

- Keep the pleasant aspects of your life in mind.
- Don't dwell on failures.
- Set worthy goals for yourself, and don't waste time and effort on the trivial.
- Don't procrastinate, which only intensifies stress.
- Strive for improvement, but not perfection: you don't always have to prove yourself to be a worthwhile person.
- Seek your own level of challenge and dare to risk a change in your life. Take control.

Penalty

Whenever it appears to the Tax Court that proceedings before it have been instituted or maintained by you primarily for delay or that your position in such proceedings is frivolous or groundless, damages in an amount not in excess of $5,000 shall be awarded to the United States by the Tax Court in its decision.

The boy, Rambo (who inexplicably is the one wearing the pink hair bow), is a royal demon who divides his time between munching the rattan furniture and laying on his back spread-eagled. "Put your legs together, you silly boy," Kristian tells him.

Gun control advocates argue the Second Amendment is no longer relevant because it gives criminals and the insane access to firearms that they can then use to commit violent crimes, such as drug-related shootings and the Stockton school yard murders. That too is a profoundly dangerous argument, because at its core is the proposition that fundamental American liberties are qualified by the ability of criminals and psychopaths to abuse them. If the right to keep and bear arms can be abridged because of the actions of a Patrick Prudy, isn't it just as plausible to restrict the free exercise of religion because the Reverend Jim Jones persuaded 900 of his followers to kill themselves?

If You Agree

If you agree with the examiner's findings in the enclosed examination report, please sign the agreement form and return it with our transmittal letter. By signing, you are agreeing to the amounts shown on the form.

If the agreement shows you owe additional tax you may pay it without waiting for a bill. Include interest on the additional tax and on any penalties at the applicable rate from the due date of the return to the date of payment. Figure the interest as shown in the enclosed Notice 433, Yearly Interest and Certain Penalty Rates.

If you do not pay the additional tax when you sign the agreement, you will receive a bill for the additional tax. Interest is charged on the additional tax from the due date of your return to the billing date. However, you will not be billed for more than 30 days interest from the date you sign the agreement. No further interest or penalties will be charged if you pay the amount you owe within 10 days after the billing date.

Please make your check or money order payable to the Internal Revenue Service

AMERICA HAD A PLACE FOR PATRICK PURDY.

On January 17, 1989, a lone gunman entered a Stockton, Calif., elementary school carrying an AK-47 assault rifle and two semi-automatic handguns. He fired 60 rounds, killing five children and wounding thirty other people. Patrick Edward Purdy then committed suicide. The media focused on Purdy's level of mental stability and also his ability to purchase an AK-47.

THE AK-47 ASSAULT RIFLE

For the first time in the Free World, complete practical and technical information is given on the only weapon in history to be produced in an estimated 30,000,000 units. Over 150 pages and more than 100 illustrations (most of which have never been previously released), covering all aspects of this famous Soviet Bloc arm: history, identification of AK-ARM & RPK model variations & production origin, detailed parts nomenclature & description with text & photos, functioning, disassembly, inspection, preparing for firing, use & handling, stoppages & immediate action, ammunition identification & firing tables, includes exclusive, complete translation of the official Soviet technical handbook. 6 x 9, softcover.

Order No. C-122 . . . . . $7.50

When a deranged and dangerous criminal named Patrick Purdy stalked a schoolyard in Stockton, California, it was a needless tragedy.

Emotions fueled by the cold-blooded murder of children in a California schoolyard have led to widespread legislative proposals that focus on law-abiding citizens, not criminals.

CONFIDENTIAL TO ALL BRIDES-TO-BE: To ensure a perfect wedding, "break in" your wedding slippers before your wedding day. You'll be glad you did. Trust me!

You never thought it would get this crazy.

By now, some weird things may be happening inside your head.

ONCE again the monstrous acts of a lone psychopath have led to frantic calls for gun control schemes of all types. But the cold-blooded murder of the five innocent children in that Stockton, Calif., schoolyard was more than a lone maniac wielding a Chinese-made Type 56S semi-automatic rifle. Patrick Purdy is a grisly symbol of a failed criminal justice system.

Early reports from the California Department of Justice depict Purdy as a criminal constantly slipping between the cracks. His rap sheet lists arrests for extortion, prostitution, possession of narcotics, attempted robbery, receiving stolen property, criminal conspiracy and two dangerous-weapons charges.

According to author/attorney David B. Kopel, Purdy was also arrested in April 1987 for firing a pistol at trees near Lake Tahoe. He told the sheriff's deputy that he had a duty to "overthrow the suppressor." While in jail following that arrest, Purdy attempted suicide by hanging and by cutting his wrists with his toenails and fingernails. He was subsequently described in his probation officer's report as "a danger to himself and others," according to a public psychiatrist.

Yet Purdy's felony arrests were repeatedly plea-bargained down to misdemeanors, and he was sentenced to a total of 80 days behind bars. The failure of Purdy shotguns fetched a record price at a recent Christie's East auction in New York City.

A California private collector paid $187,000 for a pair of Ken Hunt-engraved J. Purdy & Sons sidelock over-under game guns. The sale price more than doubled the existing record for a pair of modern sporting guns, previously held by Sotheby's of London.

THE GENUINE BITCH: RUNNING ON RAGE

California's criminal justice and mental health systems placed Patrick Purdy on the streets without a felony record. He was thus able on five separate occasions to purchase handguns after going through the state's 15-day waiting period and police background check. A waiting period for the purchase of semi-automatic rifles would also have failed to deter this homicidal maniac.

Patrick Purdy will murder no more, but in death he still poses a threat to law-abiding Americans. His heinous acts have been seized upon by gun prohibitionists and have spurred a massive assault on the sale, manufacture and ownership of semi-automatic rifles, shotguns and pistols at both the state and federal levels. Those who deliberately misinterpret the Second Amendment "right to keep and bear arms" by claiming it limits the right solely for militia purposes and not for individuals, now hypocritically seek to attack semi-automatic firearms because they may be suitable for military use.

Seven times Purdy faced serious criminal charges. And the courts dropped or plea bargained away felony charges. Then their 15-day "waiting period and background check" system OK'd Purdy's repeated gun purchases.

"The weapons' menacing looks, coupled with the public's confusion over fully automatic machine guns versus semi-automatic assault weapons—anything that looks like a machine gun is assumed to be a machine gun—can only increase that chance of public support for restrictions on these weapons."

GLOCK & SPIEL

Speaking of the police commish, Sauce hears the Police Department has put in a purchase order for 530 Glock-17 guns for the organized crime and detective bureaus. Ward himself possesses one. Special permits are required for the plastic semi-automatics, which fire 17 rounds.

Glock 9mm Is Dependable

In an unsuccessful attempt to make a Glock malfunction, I loaded up several magazines with every factory load I could get my hands on, with every bullet weight and bullet style available. Each magazine contained one each of those factory loads in a staggered fashion. I then emptied the magazines rapid fire with the gun held upright in the conventional manner, right side down, left side down, and upside down. Not once did the Glock miss a beat.

I repeated that exercise many times and not once did the gun malfunction. Since that time, I have put over 2000 rounds through the gun and have purposefully neglected to clean it. The Glock still eats up anything I choose to feed it.

(above) The arrestee's wrists should be cuffed behind him. Do not omit a thorough search in order to uncover a hidden weapon, such as the .38 depicted here. (right) Cuffing a prisoner in front invites a blow to the chin.

Police executives have been conservative about changing to auto pistols because police doctrine has always been to make careful and effective use of the rounds in the weapon rather than to encourage more firing. With increasing concern over domestic terrorists, however, thinking has shifted in favor of more firepower. Terrorists are usually well armed with modern weapons, and know how to use them effectively. Police officers feel that they should at least have parity with terrorists.

5. Do strive to be a hero. Isn't that what police work is all about? Don't wait for a backup—blitz the suckers now. Why hesitate when you can rush in and get your name in the papers? Never mind that your peers call you a cowboy. They are just jealous because you're busy kicking butts and getting the glory you so richly deserve while they're still talking and planning. A real man charges in and solves the problem—right now.

Although books, films and videotapes can certainly help, only real-life practice will fully prepare you for the challenges of the street.

5. Don't concern yourself with proficiency. If you've ever got to shoot, chances are you'll be so close to your target you couldn't miss if you tried. And what kind of practice could you possibly need with a nightstick? You whack and they fall. What more is there to it? Any fool can snap on the bracelets, and a one-handed blind man can do a search. Don't sweat the details. Practice is for those with nothing better to do.

Significantly, of the officers murdered, some 13 were shot with their own weapons. The most popular firearms used against officers were the .38-caliber and the .357-magnum. These two weapons accounted for nearly two-thirds of the police handgun killings. In addition, three officers were stabbed to death, two were run down with vehicles, and two were wounded with gunfire and then burned to death in a vehicle.

Where did these violent deaths occur? The country's most populous region, the South, accounted for 28 police killings during the year. The Midwest reported 17 officers killed; the West, 15; the Northeast, 12; and Puerto Rico, 1.

How did these peace officers die? Twenty-seven were slain in arrest situations. Twenty-two officers were killed after responding to disturbance calls of one kind or another. Eight were murdered while enforcing traffic laws. Six were handling or transporting prisoners when fatally attacked and five were investigating suspicious persons or circumstances. Four officers were killed during ambush attacks and one was murdered by a mentally deranged subject.

Who murdered police in that sample year? Of 85 suspects identified, 77 were male and eight were female. Forty-six of the assailants were under age 30. Forty-six also had been arrested previously.

• A canine patrol officer effects a "routine" traffic stop at 2:20 a.m. The 25-year-old officer approaches the stopped vehicle and is shot fatally in the chest with a .44-magnum handgun. A 33-year-old male suspect is arrested.

• A 33-year-old conservation officer issues a citation for "fishing without a license" to a male adult at approximately 4 p.m. The subject then goes to his vehicle, obtains a rifle, and shoots the officer four times. The eight-year veteran dies of his wounds.

• A 12-year patrolman stops a suspicious pedestrian at about 4 a.m. The 19-year-old male subject produces a handgun, reaches inside the patrol vehicle and shoots the officer fatally in the chest and abdomen.

In 1987, the last year for which detailed figures are available from the FBI's Uniform Crime Reports, some 73 American police officers were murdered. (The figures for 1988 are still being tabulated.) That number was 11 percent higher than the preceding year in which 66 officers were slain. All of the officers killed in 1987 were male.

Law already covers conversion of rifles to full automatic

YOUR Feb. 20 editorial, "Leave assault rifles for the military," deserves some clarification.

You propose to ban semi-automatic versions of military rifles because they can be converted to full automatic with "only minimal effort."

But federal law already classifies firearms which can be "readily restored" to automatic fire as machine guns. The unauthorized possession of one subjects the violator to up to 10 years in prison and up to $10,000 in fines. (Title 26, U.S. Code, Sections 5845 (b) & 5871.)

If you have knowledge of any firearm that can be readily converted to full-automatic fire, it is your duty to report that fact immediately to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (212-264-1733).

The BATF conducts extensive tests to ensure that firearms that can be readily converted are not allowed on the market. The Uzi semi-automatic carbine, for example, required major redesign by its manufacturer before the BATF allowed its importation.

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration yesterday temporarily banned imports of over 100,000 semiautomatic attack weapons, such as the one used in a California schoolyard slaughter.

President Bush — a lifelong National Rifle Association member who previously voiced doubts about gun control, even of attack weapons — endorsed the move, the White House said.

His wife, Barbara, was the first White House figure to speak out on the issue last month, saying attack weapons absolutely should be banned.

When her apparent difference of opinion with her husband made headlines, she stopped discussing the issue, but didn't say she had changed her mind.

A factor in the decision, the White House said, was an alarming surge in demand for such attack weapons.

"They're reviewing the gun law to see if these weapons have any legitimate sporting purpose," said White House spokesman Alix Glen.

"This [the import ban] is to keep 110,000 from coming in

As with any other task, repeated exposure to a task allows you to become more comfortable with performing the task. If you remember your first building search, you were probably nervous and stressed, but as you've made other searches in your career, you've become more effective at performing them even though the stress and potential danger still exist.

Bad Roger had come with him. He was naked to the waist. His chest was crisscrossed by bandoleers of ammunition. His hair had been cut into a Mohawk stripe. He wore camouflage paint on his face. He carried an AK-47 in one hand and an Uzi in the other. Above his heart were tattooed the words: "Have a Nice Day."

"I will exercise my rights as a decent, law-abiding American," Rambo Roger said. "I will shoot you."

Good Roger eyed the AK-47 and the Uzi nervously. "Do you have a license for those things?" he asked.

"Don't need one," Rambo Roger said. "I live just outside Washington in Maryland. If I wanted to buy a handgun, I would have to fill out an application and wait seven days so the state police could find out if I was a lunatic killer or an escaped convict. And, in fact, the police reject hundreds of such handgun applications every year."

"Thank goodness," Good Roger said.

"But to get an assault rifle, to get a high-powered, fast-firing attack rifle capable of shredding human flesh, no waiting period or background check is required."

"That's crazy!" Good Roger said.

"No, that's America," Rambo Roger said.

He also mentioned he had working silencers. New York agents got a search warrant.

Seinfeld's Ocean Avenue apartment and garage housed an assortment of weapons, kits and parts for making gun conversions and silencers. There was a well-equipped machine shop for converting semiautomatic Uzis to full-auto with barrels threaded for silencers. Seinfeld is currently serving 10 years in prison.

The administration could decide to make the ban permanent, she added.

Weapons covered by the ban include AK-47s (the weapon used in the schoolyard slaughter), Uzis, FN-FA and FN-FNC-type weapons.

"Absolutely," Rambo Roger said. "Let's say your boss comes up to you and says 'Well, Throckmorton, late again today. I see. One more time and this will go on your permanent record.' You can get up from your desk, go down to your local gun shop, buy an Uzi, come back and even up the score with your boss and anybody else who gets in your way, all in under 10 minutes."

"And you would not accept even a seven-day waiting period?"

"Of course not! If you have to wait seven days, you might calm down. You might have a session with your psychiatrist. Your boss might apologize. Or give you a raise. Then where would you be?"

"Sane and happy?"

Bush Bans Import Of Semi-Auto Assault Weapons

Anybody who wants a machine gun can have it with a little mechanical skill, and breaking a few federal laws. "The problem has always been those contraband guns which are possessed by the criminal element and are passed from hand to hand by the criminal element. Those that are made by the criminal element, the semiautomatic firearm that is converted to fully automatic, become machine guns and become a problem," said Robert Creighton, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF) Special Agent in Charge of the New York District.

The recent Hughes Amendment, which bans private ownership of machine guns made after May 19, 1986, included conversions within its definition of a machine gun: "...any part designed and intended solely and exclusively, or combination of parts designed and intended for use in converting a weapon into a machine gun, and any combination of parts from which a machine gun can be assembled if such parts are in the possession or under the control of a person."

According to BATF reports, the most commonly converted semiautomatics are the AR-15, Uzi, MAC-10

An assault on weapons

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — A bill to virtually ban sales of more than 40 types of assault weapons in California, including the one used by a deranged drifter to kill five Stockton schoolchildren, was cleared yesterday by the Assembly. The Senate previously approved a broader version.

Gov. George Deukmejian has indicated a preference for the Assembly's bill. Lawmakers now must work out compromise legislation.

The hour, anchored by Dan Rather, will include live interviews as well as material gathered by eight correspondents and 10 crews in the last two days. It is subtitled "Armed and Deadly," but the real theme is a question: Does the ban go far enough?

Viewers will get a gun glossary, an emergency room perspective, a chance to browse gun stores in Texas, a lesson on the politics of gun control and a trip to Stockton, Calif., the site of the massacre of five schoolchildren.

The weapons singled out for the ban include the AK-47, a weapon of Soviet and Chinese design, which are imported from China and other countries, the Uzi carbine and FN/FAL, which are manufactured in and shipped from Israel, the Belgian FN/FNC and the West German Steyr Aug.

New York Police Commissioner Benjamin Ward yesterday said through a spokesman, "These weapons are aptly called assault weapons. They provide a more lethal means of attacking human beings; nothing else."

and MAC-11. Their statistics reveal increasing seizures of converted weapons: 1981—214; 1982—397; 1983—164; 1984—210; 1985—1,609 (1986 and 1987 unavailable).

In addition, the BATF states that certain MAC-10/11 and Uzi firing bolts (allowing 10-minute, reversible, undetectable conversion) which have been reclassified as machine guns are

But it did nothing to curb the ownership of more than 88,000 semi-automatic assault weapons sold in this country since 1986.

And one expert said the gun ban will not affect semi-automatic weapons made in plants scattered around this country, including Texas, Florida and Massachusetts.

That's what the guy was doing when he blasted all those children in Stockton, Calif. Getting even."

Assault Weapons

Colt Industries Inc. halted most domestic sales of its AR-15 military-style assault rifle yesterday, a day after the federal government temporarily suspended imports of similar weapons.

Meanwhile, some area gun dealers said they were experiencing a run on assault rifles by customers fearful that such weapons eventually will be banned. "We've been getting 10 calls a day for these guns," said Michael Zirmo, president of Zirmo Co., a Manhattan gun store on Warren Street.

As with other firearms dealers, Zirmo said he believed government officials were simply overreacting to the recent murder of five schoolchildren in California by a man with an AK-47 assault rifle. That weapon was imported into the United States from China by a New York City firm, Sile Distributing Co.

Striker-12 Shotgun

Law Enforcement Ordinance

Corporation introduces the Striker-12, 12-shot rotary drum, double-action, semi-automatic shotgun. According to the manufacturer, the weapon will fire all 12 rounds in less than three seconds and has half the felt recoil of normal shotguns. According to the manufacturer, the gun can be fired with one hand. It is available with a 12- or 18-inch barrel, a full assault stock or folding stock, and either the standard military phosphate finish or a dull stainless "Metal Life" finish.

not included in these figures. Efforts are also under way to have the AR-15 reclassified as a machine gun.

Charles Fredericks, special agent with the BATF in New York City, believes that when drugs are being sold and large amounts of money are being collected, criminals will turn to machine guns to protect their goods. Fredericks points out that some drug-selling locations accumulate as much as $20,000 in eight hours and "you have to have protection for that." Machine guns are perfect for such a task as they are compact, available, cost-effective high firepower.

"These major narcotics organizations are dealing in huge amounts of money. And how do you protect huge amounts of money? You protect them with violence, because there are two [types of] people after you: the competition, which are very violent people, and, unfortunately...law enforcement," said Special Agent Creighton.

The furor over the tragedy in Stockton, Calif., overlooks many pertinent facts, chiefly the failure of the criminal justice system. But another point I have not seen made is that any killer familiar with firearms could have murdered just as many children with a bolt-action rifle, a lever-action carbine, a pump-action shotgun, or for that matter, an automobile.

Anti-gunners say criminal acts by maniacs like Patrick Purdy are reason enough to take away your firearms. But they won't lift a finger to keep repeat offenders like Purdy in jail. They won't admit their waiting periods and background checks let Purdy purchase firearms with ease.

Sponsors of these measures claim they are aimed 'only' at military-style assault rifles such as the Kalashnikov copy used by psychopath Patrick Purdy in an attack on a Stockton, California schoolyard in which five children were killed.

The USCCCN National Clearing

House on Satanic Crime has introduced a new training guide which addresses satanism and satanic crimes. The American Focus on Satanic Crime-Volume #1 was created as a training guide for law enforcement agencies, correctional institutions and related security settings, and is the first volume in a continuing series.

According to the publisher, the training guide covers topics such as ritualism and serial murder, the philosophy and practice of modern Satanism, an explanation of ritual events, investigative testimony by a former federal investigator, and ritual child abuse.

Police officers in rural areas are acquainted with certain stretches of country roads which are irresistible to speeders. Officer Anderson set up a radar trap in one such area, and waited for the usual amount of offenders.

But nothing happened. In fact, some drivers smiled and waved at him as they cruised by, safely below the limit. Becoming suspicious, he went to investigate.

Sure enough, just around the bend he found a youngster holding up a sign reading "RADAR TRAP." He picked up the offender, and the two drove down the road where the boy's partner held up another sign which read "CONTRIBUTIONS."

Beneath the sign was a pile filled with change totaling more than $20. ■

FBI figures show that over the years, 20 percent of police officers feloniously killed in the line of duty have been victims of their own sidearms, which were "snatched" by suspects. This, in combination with the increasing use of soft body armor by officers has led to another restriction in police ammunition. Before soft body armor, some agencies used the most powerful caliber or ammunition their officers could handle. Today, they restrict their officers to ammunition that isn't powerful enough to penetrate the vests they wear. This offers extra protection in case a suspect manages to seize an officers' gun.

Couple Die in Apparent Murder-Suicide in N.J.

Bloomington, N.J. (AP) — A school teacher apparently shot his wife to death and then committed suicide as the couple's three adopted and mentally disabled children remained in another room, officials said yesterday.

The incident in the couple's home appeared to be a murder-suicide, but is still under investigation, Passaic County Prosecutor Ronald Fava said.

The couple were identified as David Hoffman, 53, and his wife Carolyn, 46. They apparently died early Sunday, but their bodies were not found until Monday night. Bloomington police entered the home at the request of Carolyn Hoffman's relatives, who became concerned when no one answered the telephone.

Fava said the couple's children were found unharmed by police and taken to Chilton Memorial Hospital for observation.

The children included two boys, aged 3 and 6, and a 19-year-old girl with a mental age of about 9, he said.

This was made strikingly clear several years later when one of the officers of this department was fatally shot by two brothers and repeatedly kicked as he lay dying. Why? Don't even attempt to understand it. Just realize that the mentality exists in some of the people you come in contact with and ... the star you're wearing means nothing to them. You're not invincible and there is no mystical force or guardian angel protecting you.

I later moved to another police department but I still remember my Sergeant walking up to me behind Donovan's that night.

"Do you know why they put those little balls on the tips of your star" he asked.

"Yes Sir" I replied. "So it won't hurt as much when they shove it up your ass."

The device itself attaches to my gunbelt and is about the size of a walkman radio. Three wires are attached under my vest to monitor my lungs and heart rate. The lead-lined box contains approximately 273.19 milligrams of pure weapons-grade plutonium, wired in the standard neutron configuration (probably limiting extensive structural damage to inside the immediate blast area).

Armed by a coded entry system, this device is triggered by the cessation of lung and/or heart activity. The resulting explosion eliminates all life-forms within a three block radius. The only disadvantages are that identification of the alleged assholes is nearly impossible, and reconstruction of the crime scene is a bitch.

Once your mob is saturated and their eyes burning and skin itching (low-level chemical warfare), you can then announce on your public address system (PA) that if they get to the buckets of antidote in your fenced-in enclosure at the fence line, in five minutes, they will not be permanently blinded. They will probably quit their fight and head for the buckets in your enclosure!

Five of the most common situations in which officers were disarmed are:

1. Attempting to make an arrest.
2. Facing mental patients.
3. Interacting with drugged persons.
4. Field interrogations.
5. Large crowds.

Ms. Behavior's basic premise is that Top and Bottom are, in reality, equals (your judgment is no less important than hers). But if you want to stay in your role you do have to respect the Top's judgment. You can use an agreement that allows you to bring things to her attention but in the end it will be she who decides what, if anything, needs to be done with the information, thus keeping roles intact. When you're not in a scene situation, think about whether you basically trust the other woman's judgment, especially if you enjoy placing yourself in compromised positions such as bondage or fisting. If you want to explore but have doubts that relate to specific kinds of play, toys, or behavior, approach them without rushing it. Allow trust to develop between you. Your instincts for survival are not to be taken lightly. Use them as a guide to what feels safe and right, and Ms. Behavior thinks you will be able to surrender control with greater assurance.

I was out stalking in our farthest field when I spotted a cottontail about 100 feet away. My heart was pounding so hard I could barely steady my rifle as I took aim and squeezed off a single shot. I got it! The little brown creature let loose with the most horrible yipping cries I'd ever heard. I ran over and found him very much alive, twitching in agony. I should have fired another shot and put him out of the misery I'd caused, but I just couldn't do it. Instead, I carried him home, put disinfectant on the wound, bandaged it with a piece of sheeting and carried him down to the pond, where I placed him in the shelter of an old canoe.

PERHAPS MY MOST abiding memory is of a patient who had changed his name to Mr. Human Being. Mr. Being, or "Hume" as we called him, believed that society was full of wicked people, especially world leaders, who were willing to play with deadly weapons that could wipe out life on earth. He thought we should all try to love one another and to live in peace, regardless of differences of race or creed. It was sometimes hard to remember why Human Being was mentally ill.

Police were randomly fired upon. At least two buildings and several vehicles, including two from the news media, were set on fire. An auto parts store was also set ablaze and fire trucks were unable to get near because of gunfire. Several police officers, reporters and passersby were hit by rocks and bottles.

Unfortunately, much of this "normal" ability to adjust is negated with police officers who, as a result of occupational hazard, routinely wear soft body armor or so-called bullet-proof vests. Such items of protective clothing as these effectively neutralize the natural pocket formed by the shoulder and further serve to increase the overall length of pull with their added bulk. As a result, many officers of less than average height are unable to quickly or efficiently operate the weapon's controls, i.e., trigger, slide, safety or slide release when same is at the shoulder in the firing position.

In her early 30s, she suffered a breakdown, left her job as an executive receptionist, and began her slide into a precarious life on the wrong side of the tracks and, often, the wrong side of the law. One night in 1975, she ran amok in her Canal District neighborhood, rampaging through the streets in a red nightgown and tearing a local bar to pieces with a steel knife sharpener. She was detained by the police; the adventure earned her a stay in Napa State Hospital.

Dear Box Holder,      24 HOUR ACCESS: $ .00    MAIL FORWARDING: $ .00

We here at Mail Boxes Etc. appreciate your support and patronage, and we hope to continue serving your postal, shipping and communication needs. We do our best to maintain a high level of efficiency in every aspect of service to all our customers.

Beginning March 15, 1989, we will be implementing a new billing schedule for all our box holders, to enable us to serve you better. In the past, we billed renewals throughout the entire month, depending on the date the box was originally opened. We feel that we would be able to serve you better if our billing was done on two specific days each month. Therefore, all box holders will be billed as follows:

"You hear things like, 'He'd charm the shoes off Imelda Marcos. He's a revelation. I don't know. I hardly think I'm a revelation, or that I could charm the shoes off a woman who's too busy running in them, or without them.'"

If your renewal falls between the second and sixteenth of the month, your billing date will be the sixteenth of the month.

If your renewal falls between the seventeenth and the first of the month, your billing date will be the first of the month.

You will receive your bill in your box two weeks before your billing date.

If payment has not been received one week after your billing date, mail will be held until payment is received.

If payment has not been received one month after your billing date, your box will be closed and all mail will be returned to sender.

If you know ahead of time that you won't be renewing your box, please give us at least two weeks notice so that we can expedite the paperwork involved in closing a box.

N.J. TRAGEDY: SUFFER LITTLE CHILDREN

By JANE FURSE

A boy was blinded and another remained in critical condition yesterday one day after being shot by a neighbor "just looking for basically anyone to vent his frustration."

The gunman, 60-year-old exmental patient George Proctor, died in a shootout with New Jersey police Saturday after firing at three children, killing a young girl and wounding the two boys.

Authorities cited possible motives for his murderous spree — it came days after his sister's death and minutes after a fistfight with teens who had pelted his "mint-condition" Cadillac with rocks.

But no one could explain how, or why, he selected his young victims since none had been in on the vandalism.

"He was just looking for basically anyone to vent his frustration," said West Orange Police Chief Edward Palardy.

"He just went berserk."
The only mistake 9-year-old Ivory Smith, who lived next door to Proctor on Watchung Avenue, made was walking in on Proctor as he began his murderous spree.

Proctor shot her once in the head — and she died hours later.

Walking into the apartment building's backyard, he fired on Kareem Davis, 8, as he played, and then turned his gun Joshua Neighbor Joseph Anello said that a year ago he found an enraged Proctor about to saw the head off Anello's poodle, Frenchy, because of the dog's barking annoyed him.

According to Anello's sister, Marion, Proctor was an avid hunter who used to gut fish and raccoons outside his apartment, then scare kids with the carcasses.

MIDTOWN COPS GUN DOWN SWORDSMAN IN MACHETE MAYHEM

By CHRIS OLIVER, ANNE E. MURRAY and LEO STANDORA

A deranged man swinging a small sword was shot dead on a Midtown street yesterday after he tried to hack people near the United Nations.

Police said they first tried to stop the 6-foot, 200-pound assailant — who sported a Mohawk haircut — with mace and a powerful stun gun.

But neither worked. "This guy wouldn't stop for anybody," one witness said. Instead, cops say, he attacked them — until he was finally shot to death.

The drama began shortly after 2 p.m. when the unidentified man, who cops said was in his 30s, started slashing at passersby near Dag Hammarskjöld Plaza on Second Avenue while shouting, "Do you want some of this?"

Police said he was using a kukri, a 2-foot boomerang-shaped sword favored by the legendary Gurkha fighting force of Nepal.

"The guy was standing in the middle of the block at 47th Street and Second Avenue swinging this big knife at everybody and yelling at people," said Scott Cunningham, 26.

Scores of frightened bystanders fled into doorways and stores and ran across the street to get out of the way, Cunningham said.

The assailant headed toward Third Avenue. Along the way, "he took a swipe at a businessman and nearly got him," Cunningham said.

"The guy was so scared, he dropped his briefcase on the street and ran into a deli."

Cops caught up with the sword swinger at Third Avenue, where four of them surrounded him to prevent him from hurting anyone in a rapidly growing crowd of onlookers.

Sgt. Robert Harmischkeger of the East 34th Street station house then fired a Taser stun gun.

POST-MORTEM: A shocked cop on the scene tells a detective how the unidentified madman was gunned down.

whose two darts lodged in the man's right side beneath the ribs. Taser shock — 50,000 volts — usually knocks most anyone off his feet.

But this time, the cops were stunned to see it do nothing more than further enrage the assailant.

They later learned the man was wearing four layers of clothing that stopped the darts from piercing his skin.

"He started swearing and really yelling when the thing hit him," said food vendor Caesar Gonzales.

"He yanked it out of his side and pulled the wires out of the cop's gun and kept going."

The cops kept yelling him to stop, and he kept yelling back.

"Come and get it."

The man got to 40th Street and Third Avenue, where he suddenly turned and took a vicious cut at Police Officer Robert Masucci, 25, a member of the force for less than three years.

Police said Masucci ordered the assailant to freeze.

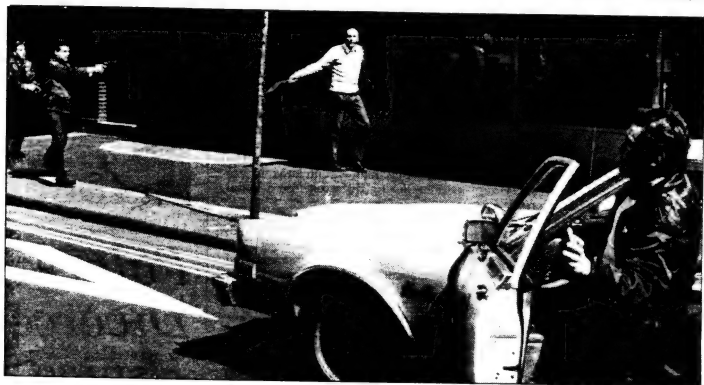

When the man raised the sword to strike again and came at Masucci, the cop fired two shots into his chest.

Although mortally wounded, the man managed to run across Third Avenue still clutching the kukri before he dropped.

Doctors at Bellevue Hospital said he died there at 3:30 p.m. Masucci was treated for shock at the hospital.

Police said they have no reports of injuries to civilians.

Knife-toting man menace crowd — he's killed after Taser doesn't faze him

The wires from the Taser gun were protruding from his body. He had no identification. He was wearing two pairs of pants.

With their guns raised, left, cops follow the man as he heads down Third Avenue yesterday, swinging his knife.

Knife-Wielding Man Slain

Cops bring him down in midtown

The mortally wounded man is handcuffed by officers, dark shoes and an earring. He was not carrying identification.

McCabe said the man repeatedly told the officers they "would have to shoot him" in order to disarm him.

In all, five officers encircled the man when he reached 46th Street. They followed proper police procedure, McCabe said.

"We did everything humanly possible in this situation to contain this man without taking his life," McCabe said at a press conference last night. "He forced the officer's hand by lunging at him." Witnesses seemed to support the police account.

"The cops said drop the knife, drop it, drop it," said Cesar Gonzalez, a 47th Street pushcart operator who watched the drama unfold. "He just said come and get it."

Splotchy blood stained the sidewalk where the man had fallen, a few feet from the discarded weapon.

A few minutes later, a police spokesman, Lt. Steve Davis, dressed in a double-breasted gray suit and red tie, stands on the sidewalk a few paces north of the Bailey Cafe. There are two red chalk circles by his feet. One says "no" for perpetrator and the other "po" for police officers. Business people stream by as Davis reports that the skinned, as yet unknown, first appears at First Avenue and 47th Street and is reported as an emotionally disturbed person. There are more calls as he meanders through the streets, waving this knife that was closer to a sword. Now he is up to Third and 47th and turns downtown. He passes Joe and Rose's Restaurant, walking close to the building, with the knife held out and to the rear in his right hand. Two policemen trail him and walk to the outside of him. Their guns are aimed right at him. There is plenty of room and no reason to shoot. Police cars pull up at the northeast corner of Third and 46th. A sergeant named Robert Harnischfeger shouts a Taser gun at the guy. A Taser has electronic darts, on wires, that go into a body and should knock anybody flat. Apparently, the darts don't get through his clothing.

Now the guy walks with his big knife across the street and is on the sidewalk between 46th and 47th Streets, on the East Side of the street. Lt. Davis says that at this spot he turns with the knife and waves it. Davis places one officer, Robert Masucci, only five paces away, and the skinned man starts swinging the sword. Masucci shoots him twice in the chest. You ask if the guy has to be shot, and they show you the knife and point to the street at this hour one of the most crowded days of the world.

The police do not put him down. He holds the knife and walks across the street and lunge at a man who is the spokesman in front of a television land short.

"I don't know if the guy is going to make it," Davis now says. He does not. As we talk, the skinned dies at Bellevue. "He was shot twice," Davis says.

"Only two shots fired?" he is asked.

"That's all. Two. Right here. Nothing across the street. The cop who did the shooting is an trauma."

"Was he cut with the sword?"

"No. He wasn't touched."

There are police trucks and cars and groups of uniformed cops and detectives everywhere. Crowds watch from across streets. In Brooklyn the thing is not good enough to make conversation. It freezes the middle of Manhattan.

"He just looked down for a second and didn't even move," said Scott Cunningham, 22, a photographer who moved to the city from Bowling Green, Ohio, two days ago. "It didn't even look like it registered on his face."

A man who menaced scores of pedestrians with an 18-inch knife yesterday afternoon on a crowded midtown Manhattan street was fatally shot by one of several police officers trying to subdue him.

The man, who police said apparently was emotionally disturbed, told police to "come and get it" when they surrounded him on Third Avenue at East 46th Street about 2:30 p.m. after he lunged at a police officer who was about three feet away. The man was shot once in the upper chest and stomach, police and witnesses said. The wounded man struggled across the street and collapsed just above 45th Street. Still alive, he was handcuffed and taken to Bellevue Hospital Center, where he died less than an hour later, police said.

Officer Robert Masucci, 26, who fired the fatal shots, stood next to the prone body and wept, witnesses said. Police first had tried to subdue the man with a stun gun, striking him once in the chest, but it failed to stop him.

Police Inspector James McCabe said the man, whose head was shaved, wore four shirts, two pair of trousers,

A liquor bottle encased in a crumpled brown bag lay nearby. Witnesses said it had been stuffed into the man's rear right pocket.

Scott Cunningham, a photographer who had arrived in New York only two days earlier from Bowling Green, Ohio, said he spotted the man near Dag Hammarskjold Plaza on East 47th Street between First and Second Avenues.

The man, slightly more than 6 feet tall and weighing about 200 pounds, was hacking the air with the curved blade known as a known as a Gurkha knife, a weapon that originated in Nepal and is used by the British Army's crack Gurkha jungle warfare units, police said.

The man walked west on 47th Street, at one point lunging at a man with a briefcase.

By that point, police and witnesses said, the man had reached Third Avenue, where a police car stopped.

Masucci and his partner, Officer Peter Friscia, got out and followed the man. McCabe said.

From nowhere on Third Avenue, instantly came out of the afternoon sun yesterday and danced into everybody's eyes. Joe Benvenuto, 31, is sitting at the end of the bar, right against the window in the restaurant he owns, the Bailey Cafe, on Third Avenue between 45th and 46th Streets yesterday. He is in the center of the city in the middle of a business day and suddenly he sees these two men running frantically past the window. Not a woman come running. She runs right out of one of her shoes. Joe thinks she is fleeing a mugger. Now Joe sees that where outside his window people are running and jumping out into traffic, and now he sees the big guy with the knife.

The knife is long and curved. Joe notices that the guy is a skinned. But not much else. Joe knows he does not see whether the guy is white or black, which usually is the first rule of sight in New York. Joe does not know what kind of clothes the guy has on. He just sees some kind of a vague, big skinned and a long knife. Joe knows what he is looking at with the knife, all right. It is about a foot and a half long and has a mean curve and a wood handle. The big skinned is waving the knife. The police arrive. Four or five of them. Joe sees them about 20 feet away. The skinned claps a hand onto his jaw.

5 feet from cop

"The cops said, 'Drop the knife,' and he said, 'Come and get it,'" said Cesar Gon-

The drama began at 2:30 p.m. when police responded to a call of a man waving a large knife and shouting obscenities and threats to passersby at 47th St. and First Ave.

Crowd scattered

As the man headed west on 47th St., pedestrians scattered.

"Everybody started running, yelling, saying, 'There's a guy on the street with a machine,'" said Johnson.

When the man reached Third Ave., cops said, he lunged at Officers Robert Masucci and Peter Friscia. They ordered him to drop the knife.

Friscia sprayed McCabe the man. But to no avail. "He told them that he was not going to drop the knife and they would have to shoot him to get it," Inspector James McCabe said at a news conference.

Even more enraged, the man turned downtown.

On the north side of 46th St., Sgt. Robert Harnischfeger fired two Taser darts at the man. The darts, attached by wire to an electrical gun, didn't faze him. It was un-

Just south of 46th St. and Third Ave., the man pivoted and threateningly raised the knife above his head, lunging toward Masucci, McCabe said.

Witness accounts differ as to whether the man swung the blade and how far apart the two men were.

But cops said Masucci fired twice at a distance of about 5 feet.

In October, after spending last summer in the Franklin Delano Roosevelt VA Hospital in upstate Montrose, Bertran was arrested on Dean St., not far from the schoolyard. The charge: menacing with a knife.

Since then, Bertran divided his time between a halfway house in Montrose and his mother's Brooklyn home.

On Monday morning, Louis Phillip Bertran called his mother in Brooklyn and told her he would be needing some clothes. Esther Bertran, who spent the last decade or so worrying and weeping over Louis, put his things in

That afternoon, her child was fatally shot by a cop on an East Side street after a knife rampage.

In life, "Phil" Bertran, 33, was the good kid who played stickball by the old PS 47 schoolyard on Dean St. in Brooklyn.

In death, he became an unfortunate story — the crazy

vet. who was killed by two slugs of a .38-caliber police revolver after he threatened cops and passersby with an 18-inch Gurkha knife.

"I don't blame the cop who shot my brother," Louis' 40-year-old stepbrother, Abraham Ortiz, said yesterday. "I understand he was doing his job. But 'people' must know my brother was a human being, and he was hurting." Dwayne Mack, 21, who would see Bertran in the streets around his mother's home in the Wyckoff Gardens project, remembers him walking down the street muttering to himself.

9. Excessive Force - Will Justify Self Defense

State v. State, 463 So.2d 372 (1985)

Jackson fought with officers who were attempting to arrest him. A jury convicted him of resisting arrest with violence after the judge instructed them that a person is never justified in the use of any force to resist an arrest. The appellate court reversed, stating that the law allows the use of force by a person being arrested in cases where excessive force is used by the officers making the arrest.

20. Illegal Arrest - Suspect May Resist with Necessary Amount of Force

State v. Hornaday, 713 P.2d 71 (1986)

A police officer noticed the odor of alcohol on Hornaday's breath, and arrested him on charges of being a minor in possession of alcohol. Hornaday resisted and was charged with resisting arrest. The court held that the arrest was unlawful because Hornaday was not in possession of alcohol, as it was in his body already, and that Hornaday was therefore entitled under Washington law to resist arrest by using an amount of force proportional to that amount being used in the attempt to arrest him.

Insufficient Facts - Warrantless Arrest - Possession of Cocaine with Intent to Distribute TX

Smith v. State of Texas, 759 S.W.2d 163 (1988)

Two police officers were on routine patrol when they passed a parking lot where Smith was standing next to another man by a car. One officer recognized Smith as being someone who previously made some transactions. The officers circled back and saw Smith exchange something with the other man. The officers told both men to stop and conducted a search. One officer noted that Smith had a manila envelope on him, which is commonly used to carry drugs. The officer opened it to find cocaine. Smith was arrested.

The officer then took some car keys that had been found on Smith, opened the car and the trunk and conducted a search. The officer found four ounces of cocaine in the trunk and a machine-pistol in the car. Smith was convicted of possession of cocaine with intent to distribute and appealed the conviction on the grounds that the cocaine had been seized after an illegal arrest and could not be used as evidence against him at trial.

DECISION: Reversed.

Insufficient evidence was presented at trial to support the officer's warrantless arrest of Smith. The officers had no definite idea what the "something" was which Smith gave to the other man. The activity of Smith and the other man — standing by the car in the lot, exchanging "something" — could have been as innocuous as it was criminal. Without more to go on, the evidence was insufficient to support a warrantless arrest. Any evidence found as a result of that arrest could not be used against Smith at trial. The conviction had to be reversed.

Manhunt for Winery Worker in Rampage

Calif. Murder Theory

A California winery worker faced murder charges yesterday stemming from a bloodbath "so bizarre, so incomprehensible" that the county public defender said he believed a brain disorder might explain the crimes.

Ramon Salcido remained under heavy guard and a suicide watch in the Sonoma County, Calif., jail, a day after an enraged mob greeted his arrival from Mexico with shouts of "Kill him" and picket signs supporting capital punishment.

Salcido so far has been charged with four counts of murder and three of attempted murder in the April 14 killing spree that claimed the lives of his wife, two of their children and four others.

He could face the death penalty if convicted. Sonoma County Chief Public Defender Marteen Miller said he will have Salcido undergo a battery of psychiatric and neurological tests. "I expect to find some brain lesion or tumor," he said, calling the crimes "so bizarre, so incomprehensible."

WINERY MAN HUNTED IN KILLING OF 5

Post wire services

GLEN ELLEN, Calif. — A distraught winery worker missing with his three young daughters was the object of an intense hunt yesterday after a violent rampage left his wife and four other people dead in the Northern California wine country.

Investigators discovered a woman and two girls dead at the home of Ramon Salcido's in-laws and found another woman dead at his home. The fifth victim was shot to death near the Grand Cru Winery, where Salcido worked.

One investigator described the in-laws' house as "one of the most horrible crime scenes he had seen in his life, a violent, violent attack," said Sonoma County Sheriff Richard Michaelson.

The two girls, 8 and 12, had been sodomized and otherwise sexually abused, Michaelson said.

Officials did not give a motive for Salcido's apparent rampage.

But they said Salcido had been served Tuesday with papers ordering him to pay a former wife in Fresno $511 a month to support a young daughter by that marriage.

Also, he was ordered to repay Fresno County more than $5,900 in public assistance apparently paid to the ex-wife, Debra Ann, after he failed to provide support for their child.

Late yesterday, a statewide alert was issued for Salcido, believed driving a battered faded maroon or brown Ford LTD with a torn vinyl roof and no hubcaps, and accompanied by his three little girls, ages 2, 3 and 4.

"The thing that's most frightening," Michaelson said as police helicopters swept back and forth across the wine country vineyards, "is he's out there with his three kids. The safety of those children is critical."

Officials said Salcido began his rampage when he went to the ranch of a locally prominent man, Bob Kunde, and wounded ranch worker Kenneth Butti in the right shoulder. Butti, 33, was in fair condition at Santa Rosa Memorial Hospital.

Then the gunman went to the winery and shot a male co-worker to death before fleeing in his car, Michaelson said. The body was found in a car near the winery.

Salcido then went to his home in nearby Boyes Hot Springs, Michaelson said. The body of a woman who was not immediately identified was found there.

Later, authorities found three bodies at the home of Salcido's father-in-law, Robert L. Richards, in Colati, about five miles west of here, said sheriff's Lt. Gary Zanolini. Richards was not home at the time and was uninjured.

"It's hard to believe anyone would go in there and kill them," said Hilary Lee, who lived next door.

Salcido's neighbor, Richard Clark, said he "could see it coming."

Clark, who has known Salcido for about four years, said his neighbor "liked guns and liked scaring people with guns."

A serial killer is preying on prostitutes in the same crime-infested area of Los Angeles that gave rise to the Southside Slayer, and may have killed as many as 12 women, authorities said.

Police Lt. John Zorn, who is coordinating an investigation into the killings, said Thursday that at least nine of the most recent victims were killed with the same handgun.

Rambo obsession

Police said the high school sophomore was obsessed with Rambo, the movie character who wreaks vengeance on his enemies.

When he was arrested and booked yesterday, Britton gave his nickname as "Rambo." Town of Poughkeepsie Police Chief Stanley Still Jr. said the youth may have been "emulating" the character when he shot his family.

Britton had Rambo posters in his room, as well as the official "Rambo III" movie magazine, "Soldier of Fortune" magazine, articles about guns, and military paraphernalia including army fatigues, canteens, ammunition packs and a smoke grenade.

"I'd say he had a definite fixation on Rambo and military activity and military life," said Still. Police said Britton's uncle, Richard Britton, who lives next door, called authorities at 5:22 a.m. yesterday.

Richard Britton said his nephew had come to his house, saying his father was shooting the family,

Jason was still alive when police arrived, and was taken to St. Francis Hospital in Poughkeepsie. He died at 8:06 a.m.

Sherry Britton, shot in the head and chest, was in fair condition following surgery at Vassar Brothers Hospital and is expected to survive.

The tragedy shocked the rural area of single-family homes and shopping malls on the outskirts of Poughkeepsie.

"I never expected to see something like this in our town," Still said.

They ask why

"The big reaction is, why would somebody do something like this?" said Bernard Patynski, principal of Arlington South Campus High School in LaGrange, where Britton was enrolled.

Patynski described the slim, wiry teenager as "an average type kid" who "didn't stand out in the crowd."

But neighbors of the Brittons, Joann and Herb Pelton, said the accused teenager, wearing fatigues, often played military-type games with his brother and the Peltons' young sons, fired his rifle in the yard, and had previously shot his brother and sister with a BB gun.

An air pistol? Ha! Everybody knows an air pistol doesn't go BOOM!! Or even Bang! Merely, phssst... with an innocent crack as the pellet hits the backstop. No noise, no smoke, no recoil — shooting an air pistol doesn't have anything to do with shooting the big guns.

Maybe not — but it can have everything to do with learning the techniques that make one successful at shooting any handgun. An air pistol's lack of noise and recoil, which at first thought might make it seem unrealistic for practice, are the very points which make it valuable as a training tool.

Students call him obnoxious loner with a temper

Junior Rambo shoots family

POUGHKEEPSIE — A teen-ager clad in Army fatigues and calling himself "Rambo" slaughtered his parents and little brother yesterday in a pre-dawn rampage in his rural home, police said.

Brian Britton, 16, also tried to murder his older sister — but she miraculously escaped death, despite being shot in the head and chest, authorities said.

The carnage came after a running battle over his school attendance, said Poughkeepsie Police Chief Stanley Still.

Police were not sure what set off the lanky high-school sophomore yesterday morning. But in less than three minutes, he wiped out most of his family with a shotgun, they said.

His 44-year-old father, Dennis, his mother, Marlene, 42, and his brother, Jason, 8, were killed.

His sister, Sherry, 18, was in fair condition after surgery at Vassar Brothers Hospital.

Still said the youth had a Rambo "fixation."

His bedroom was covered with memorabilia from the blockbuster movie series, as well as military paraphernalia — including a smoke grenade and canvas ammunition packs, police said.

When he was arrested, Britton told police his nickname was Rambo. Still said.

Police sources told The Post the "shaken" but unrepentant youth confessed to the crime.

But Britton pleaded innocent at his arraignment on charges of murder and attempted murder.

He was ordered held without bail by Poughkeepsie Town Court Justice Paul Sullivan and was under a suicide watch in Dutchess County Jail.

"I never expected to see something like this in our town," said Still.

Shortly after 5 a.m., Britton — armed with a 20-gauge shotgun and a 12-gauge semiautomatic — systematically pumped eight shots into family members, police said.

He allegedly hid the

He read gun magazines in the gym locker room, students said. And all he wanted to talk about was guns, they said.

Neighbor Herb Pelton recalled that the accused killer "had a knife with him at all times, a big Rambo knife.

weapons in the attic, jumped out his second-story bedroom window, and ran to his uncle, Richard Britton, who lives next-door.

The teen-ager said his father was shooting the family, and the uncle called police, according to authorities.

When police investigated, they found the bloody bodies and the 20-gauge shotgun casings littering the yellow shingled home at 567 Van Wagner Road. Britton was then arrested.

His father, a city tree-trimmer, was believed to be the first one killed.

Dennis Britton was still in bed, half under the covers, when he was shot once in the head, investigators said.

Police think he was trying to get up when he was gunned down.

The gun-toting teen-ager then moved on to the living-room area and shot his mother, a Dutchess Bank and Trust supervisor, in the head and chest, authorities said.

"For as long as I can remember he liked to wear camouflage and talk about guns," said classmate Karen Pascoe, 16.

Mrs. Britton, who had gotten up to let out the family dog, Cindy, was in the kitchen when she heard the shot that killed her husband, cops said.

She ran to find out what had happened and was cut down in her nightgown and robe, they said.

Little Jason was killed next, detectives said.

Police believe Brian tried to shoot him in bed, but missed.

The teen caught up with the pajama-clad boy near their mother's body, beat Jason with the 12-gauge shotgun and then shot him in the head, detectives said.

The little boy died later at a local hospital.

Sherry Britton, a nursing student at Dutchess Community College, put up a fight, but was shot in the head and chest as she tried to escape through the front door.

Britton had virtually no friends, although some schoolmates said he had a girlfriend.

Said a 15-year-old sophomore on the tennis team:

"Boy, was he obnoxious. That's why he didn't have many, or should I say, any friends. He was basically a loner because he couldn't get along with anybody."

POUGHKEEPSIE Brian Britton's schoolmates were not surprised that he was arrested for shooting his family.

To them, he was an "obnoxious" loner with a bad temper, who always wore Army fatigues and was obsessed with everything military — especially "Rambo." They kept away.

Said one girl at Arlington South HS after hearing about the rampage:

"If anyone was going to do that, he's the type... None of us liked him. He always called himself Rambo. He always read those magazines and would pretend to be shooting at people in class.

"He'd point his fingers like a gun and go, 'Got you' or 'You're dead, you creep.' I don't know if he was trying to incite a fight or if he was just weird."

An average student, Britton didn't belong to clubs or teams at the high school, officials said.

Principal Bernie Patynski said the school had to call his parents several times this year because he hadn't shown up for classes.

"He used to play GI Joe with the kids. He used to take them to the woods to a hole. He would put them in the hole... He sometimes tied them up. We just kept our kids away from him after they told us about this. He was an Army person, that was his dream — to go to the Marines."

Pelton's daughter, Tracy, said she remembered the accused killer's younger brother, Jason, telling her how Britton "cut himself and watched the blood run."

A Poughkeepsie teen-ager may have been "emulating" his movie hero, Rambo, when he shot-gunned his parents and little brother to death and wounded his sister, police said yesterday.

Brian Britton, 16, killed his mother, father and brother and critically wounded his older sister with a 20-gauge shotgun early yesterday at the family home on rural Van Wagner Road, investigators said.
